After the Vacancy of Darkness

Edith Shiffert

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq

Recommended Citation
EDITH SHIFFERT

AFTER THE VACANCY OF DARKNESS

After the vacancy of darkness I awaken to space in morning mists drifting like floating oil
to carry me ashore somewhere a magic body
spontaneous, myriad, in its motions, its unused senses.

A strange dawn of awareness shines on the clearing sky of thinking and recollection, a world come with myself dawn after dawn in a spread of widening colors creating beaches for floating in.

With the curved jewel of my ego I make an island at noon and stay, flesh and imagination parents of their own living idyllic on a seashore in the midday warmth, in a pillared hall by the sea’s hushing.

One evening I bear fire, and the sea does not cool it.
Stricken, consumed, I fall on the sand in pain for death and grief guessed, for how I must end, homeless imagination, no waves and no shore.

In the night I follow a path and find the thing that cannot return, shadows with worms, and push a stone in the path to it from coming,
and put a sun in my sky, a roughness on earth.

That which is rough with fear, swift, impetuous, breaks the place of the perfect light, soils the palaces,
and the sun hides in a cave while the island darkens,
while the waves sound invisibly like lamenting.

Under pale stars despairing thoughts assemble beside long memories of tranquility, a river flowing,
to hear the birds of night and handle rocks washed out by the reposeful sea, and rocks of the mountains.
Here grows a tree as sacred as the self, a holy tree!
I pull it up with soil still on its roots, while a thin moon rises, and hang it with most precious thoughts, cloth, and a mirror which shines if any light comes to the branches, dazzling.

Trimmed with fresh leaves and garlanded with growing moss
I stamp my feet and bare my body parts, shaking with laughter that they will be corrupt,
that what will be corrupt can be like this.

The mirror on the tree flashes with jewels, reflected imagination emerging again to daylight dawn after dawn as when I lay in the summer of an island and its blowing winters.

After the vacancy of darkness I awaken to space in sunlit mists, in air like a sea rising and falling
to carry me ashore somewhere, a magic body
spontaneous, myriad, in its motions, its unused senses.

MARVYN SOLOMON

A GLIMPSE IN THE MIRROR

(in reply to a well-intentioned critic of my poetry)

I check my tie, my suit
For threads, my fly; but do not Check my "dignified, spiritual, Meticulous, refined, fastidious" self.
Can I really go so dressed?
Methinks me more exposed Zipped up and buttoned than
With all my flap undone.
Those adjectives hang me in the mirror's
Closet, faultless, startling crows
Out of my empty mind.
And all around the rim the moths will find Me. Away fig leaf! I'd go Indecent than be fashioned sol