have been one acquainted with the night.
have stood still and stopped the sound of feet.
When

have stood still and stopped the sound of feet.
When

have been one acquainted with the night.
have stood still and stopped the sound of feet.
When
have walked out in rain and back in rain.
far away an interrupted cry

have walked out in rain and back in rain.
far away an interrupted cry

have walked out in rain and back in rain.
far away an interrupted cry

have walked out in rain and back in rain.
far away an interrupted cry

Came
I have out-walked the furthest city light.

But I have out-walked the furthest city light.

But I have out-walked the furthest city light.

But I have out-walked the furthest city light.

But I have out-walked the furthest city light.
have looked down the saddest city lane.
not to call me back or say goodbye.

And

have looked down the saddest city lane.
not to call me back or say goodbye.

And

have looked down the saddest city lane.
not to call me back or say goodbye.

And

have looked down the saddest city lane.
not to call me back or say goodbye.

And
have passed by the watch-man on his beat
And
further still at an unearthly height.
One

have passed by the watch-man on his beat
And
further still at an unearthly height.
One

have passed by the watch-man on his beat
And
further still at an unearthly height.
One

have passed by the watch-man on his beat
And
further still at an unearthly height.
One
dropped my eyes. un-willing to explain luminar-y clock against the sky claimed that time was neither wrong or right.
have been one acquainted with the night.
