1945

A Contemplative Gentleman

Howard Ramsden

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq

Recommended Citation

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by the University of New Mexico Press at UNM Digital Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in New Mexico Quarterly by an authorized editor of UNM Digital Repository. For more information, please contact disc@unm.edu.
A CONTEMPLATIVE GENTLEMAN

The person with despotic eyes
Is not arisen from the dead;
But spiritous beyond assay,
He wears a jewel in his head.

Contemplative, the gentleman,
Bemazing simples in a ring,
Will improvise on how he came
To wear so elegant a thing.

How grappled from the pearly moon,
And polished on a naiad's thighs,
The gem was given him by elves—
Benign it beams above his eyes.

He never tells, or seldom tells,
How once in thickets of the night
He slashed and sought and bled and toiled,
And brought his jewel to the light.

LOVE RECALLS A HOMELAND

When winter marched on Eden
With softly whirring drums,
The redbirds and the snowbirds
Were happy for our crumbs.
A deer stole in by moonlight,
A crowned but timid stranger;
The creatures of perfection
Ate from our poor manger.

Those refugees from summer,
The fleeing and the flying,
Were stainless of our knowledge,
If not of pain, in dying.