ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SCHOOL OF LAW

715

July 1, 1992 - June 30, 1993

Leo M. Romero, Dean

1. SIGNIFICANT DEVELOPMENTS DURING THE ACADEMIC YEAR

Under the direction of Dean Leo M. Romero, the law school saw continued growth in a number of its programs, the establishment of new programs and recognition of law school faculty and students for their legal scholarship. The law school also prepared a self study as part of the American Bar Association's (ABA) reaccreditation process and an ABA site inspection team visited the law school in April. The following is a summary of the important developments and accomplishments at the School of Law in 1992-93.

Reaccreditation

The American Bar Association's Section of Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar is the official accrediting agency for law schools. The law school is also accredited by the Association of American Law Schools (AALS), a membership organization with greater emphasis on scholarship and teaching. The ABA and AALS conduct a joint reaccreditation review of each school every seven years.

In the fall of 1992, the dean of the law school appointed a self-study committee consisting of two associate deans, four faculty, the director of the library, the assistant to the dean, two graduates of the law school and one student. The committee took primary responsibility for writing various sections of the self study in preparation for the the ABA-AALS site evaluation. The ABA evaluation team spent three days visiting the law school in April and in July issued a report to the accreditation committees of the ABA and AALS.

Simms Lecture Series

Sandra Day O'Connor, associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, visited the law school on Feb. 4 and 5 to deliver the School's 14th John Field Simms Memorial Lecture. Justice O'Connor met with alumni/ae and friends at a reception before delivering the 14th John Field Simms Lecture on Feb. 4. The next day, Justice O'Connor talked with students individually during an informal breakfast reception and later delivered a talk to an overflow crowd of students. She also met with the law faculty for lunch.

The Simms lectureship was established in 1954 by Albert Gallatin Simms in memory of his brother who was a well known trial attorney, a former justice of the N.M. Supreme Court, and a member of the University's board of regents. Over the years, the series has included two other Supreme Court justices, William O. Douglas in 1960 and Anthony Kennedy in 1990.

Skadden Arps Fellowship

A third-year UNM law student was among 25 aspiring public interest lawyers from across the nation who won prestigious Skadden Fellowships for 1993. Sally Hernandez was selected from a field of 245 candidates from 89 law schools after submitting a detailed proposal and an interview in Los Angeles. The fellowship enables Hernandez to represent disabled Indian children in Bernalillo County —particularly those afflicted with Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) —under the auspices of the Legal Aid Society of Albuquerque.

Fellowship winners receive a $32,500 annual salary, plus benefits and moving expenses while working in a public interest job. Hernandez is the third UNM law student to win a Skadden Fellowship and the first Native American. She joins graduates from the law schools at Harvard, Yale, Stanford, Columbia, Georgetown, University of Pennsylvania, State University of New York at Buffalo, University of Wisconsin, University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana, Northeastern University and Tulane University. The fellowships were established in 1988 by the New York-based international law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, which committed $10,000,000 to the program.

The Law School Clinical Program

The law school clinic received an $80,000 legislative appropriation to create and fund a new program, the Southwest Indian Law Clinic, which will offer legal services to New Mexico's Native Americans. The program is the result of the initiative and lobbying by Native American law student Jackie Rashleger, Class of 1993. At the beginning of the year, Rashleger drafted a bill to create the clinic as a part of her work in Prof. Paul Nathanson's Legislation class. State Sen. Leonard Tsosie '92 of Crownpoint sponsored the bill. The appropriation allows for a new faculty position in the Law Clinic and funds for travel. It is expected that the Southwest Indian Law Clinic will be operational in the spring 93-94 semester with a small group of students serving as a pilot project.

The Southwest Indian Law Clinic enhances the School's Indian law program and the School's clinical offerings; at the same time it provides a special outreach for Native American clients.

Professor Jose Martinez was named clinical director, replacing Prof. J. Michael Norwood.

Library

The 1992-93 year saw the hiring of a new library director, updates to facilities and the hosting of an annual meeting for law librarians.

New Director. The Law Library Director Search Committee was formed in August 1992, national advertising began in September, and candidate interviews were held from Jan. through March 1993. Judith Anspach was offered and accepted the position of UNM Law Library Director in April. Anspach had been director of the Thomas M. Cooley Law School Library since 1989 and was the Associate Law Librarian at the University of Connecticut Law Library from 1984 -89. An Ohio native, Anspach studied library science at Kent State University and later attended the University of Pittsburgh. She received the J.D. degree from Mississippi College in Jackson.

On-line Catalogue. Access to the UNM Libraries public catalog was established with the placement of terminals throughout the Law Library. The database (LIBROS) includes all catalog records since 1976 from Zimmerman, Parish, Centennial, Fine Arts, and the Law Library. It also includes records from the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology and records of specialized libraries in Albuquerque.

Acoustic Barrier. Construction of a glass wall acoustic barrier to reduce the noise level on the upper floor of the library began in June 1993. The project was bid in February and was awarded to Brooks & Clay and coordinated through UNM Facilities Planning. Discovery of asbestos in the ceiling material halted the project while abatement procedure were undertaken. The wall was completed in August.

Southwestern Association of Law Libraries. The Southwestern Association of Law Libraries Annual Meeting was held at the Sheraton Old Town Inn in April. More than 100 librarians and staff members attended the Conference which was hosted by the UNM Law Library. The Association includes librarians from Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

Admission

The University of New Mexico School of Law received 1184 applications for the class that entered Fall 1992. Of that group 203 were admitted. The median LSAT for those admitted was 158 and the median UGPA was 3.32. The matriculated class of 106 had a 158 LSAT median (based on the average of multiple scores). The LSAT range was 169 to 139. The UGPA median was 3.21 ranging from a 1.99 to 3.95. The average age on entry was 25. The class had 58 percent women and 46 percent minority students.

Enrollment

The law school's enrollment was 337. While the majority of its students are New Mexico residents, the undergraduate backgrounds of UNM law students represent a mix of state and private schools throughout the U.S. In the fall 1992 semester, 44 percent of the student enrollment was minority and 58 percent female.

Placement

Interviewing programs took place in the fall and spring. In the fall, approximately 25 law firms and legal employers interviewed second and third-year students for summer and permanent employment; a number of employers interviewed first and second-year students during the spring for summer jobs. In preparation for these programs the law school, assisted by Louise Edwards, assistant director of Career Counseling and Placement, held seminars for students on interviewing and resume writing techniques. The School held its fifth fall Career Fair in September. The Career Fair permits employers to meet with students on an informal basis.

Because the market for traditional law firm employment has been very tight, the law school sponsored several panel discussions on legal careers, and, in January, joined with the National Lawyers Guild to sponsor an alternative legal career fair.

The law school continues to publish its Alumni/ae Placement Bulletin, which advertises employment opportunities to recent graduates. The Bulletin is exchanged with placement offices at some 80 other law schools, further enabling our graduates to learn about employment opportunities. In addition, a weekly job update newsletter is circulated to all current students.

Finally, the school has continued to upgrade its placement information office, which is computerized and has expanded its library and file materials. The office is staffed by five students. There is a continuing need for a professional counseling staff.

Financial Aid

With few exceptions, law school grant assistance is need-based. Because grant funds have become extremely tight, due in part to the University's policy requiring reinvestment of income above a 5% rate of return, the school has been able to provide only modest grant assistance.

In 1992-93, the school made grant awards to 87 students. The total amount awarded in 1992-93 was less than the amounts awarded in the prior two years, although tuition has increased at a rate of approximately ten percent each year. As this limited grant assistance does not meet the realistic needs of our students, financial aid is one focus of the school's development activities.

Indian Law at UNM

The law school will consider developing a certificate program in the area of Indian law. UNM offers several courses in the area of Indian Law but does not offer a separate program. The law school hired a professor in the area of Indian Law, Gloria Valencia-Weber, as a Visiting Professor for 1992-93 after a national search. In March 1993, she agreed to continue with UNM in a permanent capacity. Formerly with the University of Tulsa, she taught Indian Law, Native American Rights and Immigration at UNM in 1992-93. The law school had a total Indian student enrollment of 27 in 1992-93.

The development of the Indian Law program at the UNM School of Law fits with the UNM 2000 plan and the emphasis on multiculturalism.

The Guanajuato Summer Program

The law school continued the Guanajuato summer program for the fourth year in the 1993. The law schools of the University of New Mexico, University of San Diego, and Texas Tech, in cooperation with UNM's Latin American Institute, offered six weeks of summer law study in Guanajuato, Mexico followed by an optional internship in Mexican law firms.

The Institute is organized in cooperation with the Universidad de Guanajuato Facultad de Derecho, one of Mexico's leading law centers. This cooperative effort results in a thorough introduction of American students to Mexico's legal and cultural systems.

The consortium has been operating for two years. This is an important program, an asset to the law school and consistent with the University of the Americas orientation.

Special Centers

The U.S. - Mexico Law Institute

In October, the U.S.-Mexico Law Institute, headed by Franklin Gill, held its first conference in Santa Fe. The conference was devoted to papers and discussions of the problems and prospects of a North American Free Trade Agreement. The papers were published in the United States-Mexico Law Journal, a special issue of The New Mexico Law Review, in April.

One hundred and thirty prominent attorneys, government officials and legal scholars from the United States and Mexico attended the Conference, including representatives of the U.S. International Trade Administration, the U.S. Department of State and the Mexican Secretaria de Relaciones Exteriores.

The Institute of Public Law

The Institute of Public Law (IPL) has continued to work on numerous projects funded by state and federal government and private foundations. This includes working with the New Mexico Traffic Safety Bureau where IPL staff and NEWS 101 produced a television special, Listen Up: Teens Talk about Drinking and Driving. Events focussing on drinking and driving were held around the state to gain local attention. The special aired in February on CBS affiliate Q13 and again in May on the Classroom Channel in 48 states.

IPL coordinated the 1992 New Mexico Conference on the Environment for the Governor's Office and the state Environment Department. The conference took place in Albuquerque and was attended by approximately 1000 people.

The Institute continued publication of newsletters for the Traffic Safety Bureau, New Mexico Highway and Transportation Department. In addition, IPL also published the Bureau's annual pocket version of Protect Your License: Don't Drink and Drive. The Institute also continued to co-publish Tank Notes with NMED's Underground Storage Tank Bureau. Working with the Environmental Law Institute, IPL designed and coordinated the Southwestern Judges' Conference on Environmental Law.

The Center for Health Law and Ethics received a grant for and began work on an 18-month Mediation and Medical Ethics Project to create a national database, provide five regional trainings, and host a national conference with IPL and the American Society of Law, Medicine and Ethics. Center staff worked as subcontractors with the National Center for State Courts on a national Ethics Committee and the Judiciary project. The director of the Center, Dr. Joan McIver Gibson, was elected to the Board of the American Society of Law, Medicine and Ethics and served on the Clinton Administration's Health Reform Task Force with the Ethics Working Group.

The Center for Wildlife Law passed many milestones in 1992-93. In July, the State Wildlife Laws Handbook was completed after three years of research and editing and more than $260,000 in funding. The book, a first-ever analysis of the fifty states' wildlife laws, is being published by Government Institutes, Inc. legal publishers. The USFW Division of Federal Aid approved a new $350,000 grant for publication of a companion book, the Federal Wildlife Laws Handbook.

The Center also began work on the NEPA Environmental Impact Statement for reintroduction of the endangered Mexican gray wolf. Peter Jenkins, Esq., was hired following a national search. The Center also began publication and marketing of the Wildlife Law News Quarterly which reports on the latest legal developments in wildlife law in the U.S. and Canada. In May, the Center hosted an environmental education summit for the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation in Santa Fe, during which national leaders in environmental education developed strategies for wildlife education programs.

The newly renamed Rozier E. Sanchez Judicial Education Center broke new ground in providing education and training for the judges and clerks of the judicial branch. The Center produced 21 seminars and conferences. Eight of the seminars were regional trainings on the newly adopted DWI laws. Two teleconferences were viewed by court personnel at receiving sites around the state. Other programs included faculty development, education in domestic violence problems, training in avoidance of gender and racial bias, and mock trial presentations for non-law trained judges. Staff also began a long-range planning process that will result in a comprehensive curriculum plan for all court personnel. The publication of a newsletter on education for all judicial branch employees was initiated. Permanent funding for the Center came in the form of new legislation that adds a dollar onto each misdemeanor fine imposed throughout the state. Funding for work on an expanded benchbook for limited jurisdiction judges was received, while a State Traffic Safety Bureau grant funded an extensive DWI program for judges.

The International Transboundary Resource Center

The International Transboundary Resource Center (CIRT) organized and participated in conferences, drafted treaties, and continued to add to the literature on transboundary resources. Assisted by the Ford Foundation and the Rockefeller Foundation, CIRT organized a major conference on the Management of International River Basins. The conference, held at the Rockefeller Conference Center in Bellagio, Italy, built on the experience of North American in managing its international water resources. A select group was brought together and included the following:

Charles B. Bourne, Professor, The University of British Columbia,
Vancouver, BC, Canada

Lilian del Castillo de Laborde, Attorney, Foreign Ministry, Buenos Aires, Argentina

Charles T. DuMars, Professor, The University of New Mexico School of Law, Albuquerque, NM

Leonard Dworsky, Professor, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY

Sarwat Hassan Fahmy, Engineer, Former Chairman - Nile Water Commission, Cairo, Egypt

Robert Hayton, Hayton Associates, Cos Cob, Connecticut

Ellen Hey, Professor, Erasmus Universiteit Rotterdam, DR Rotterdam, The Netherlands

Helen Ingram, Director, Udall Center for Public Studies in Public Policy, The University of Arizona, Tucson, AZ

Tauhidul Anwar Khan, Joint Rivers Commission-Bangladesh, Dhaka, Bangladesh

Nancy Laney, Legal Counsel, The University of Arizona, Udall Center for Public Studies in Public Policy, Tucson, AZ

David LeMarquand, Western Economic Diversification Canada, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada

Julie Mauer, The Great Lakes Commission, Chicago, IL

Stephen D. Mumme, Professor, Colorado State University, Fort Collins, CO

Pierre Najlis, Senior Economic Affairs Officer, United Nations, New York, NY

Ping Ruan, Deputy Division Chief, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Beijing, China

Roberto Sánchez, Director, El Colegio de la Frontera Norte, Tijuana, BC, México

Alberto Székely, Lawyer and Advisor to the Mexican Government, Mexico, DF, Mexico

Albert Utton, Director/Professor of Law, CIRT, The University of New Mexico School of Law

Sergei Vinogradov, Institute of State & Law, Academy of Sciences, Moscow, USSR

Stanislaw Wajda, Consultant to the Government of Poland,
Wilsona, Poland

Hanqin Xue, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Beijing, China

CIRT's continued its work on drafting a framework for a North American Ecological Treaty. The Treaty to be entitled the Cuixmala Draft Treaty for the Protection of the North American Ecological Zone seeks to provide a trilateral legal model for cooperation in the management of those migratory resources, such as migratory species and atmospheric resources, which can be addressed best on a regional basis. The project is in its third year.

CIRT and its director served as the Secretariat and the Secretary, respectively, for the Water Resources Committee of the International Law Association. The full committee met in Berlin in June to report its progress in the areas of major water diversions from international rivers, liability for transboundary damage, estuaries and the salt water/ fresh water interface and cross-media pollution. The committee is broadly based and has legal, diplomatic, and academic representatives.

CIRT completed the fourth year of the Graduate Program in American Legal Studies for lawyers from the Secretaria de Relaciones Exteriores of Mexico. The program, which consists of classes at the UNM School of Law, externships with the federal and state courts, clerking in a law firm and a paper on a topic of current interest to consular officers, has graduated four foreign service lawyers. Ricardo Camara Sanchez, this year's participant, wrote his thesis on Patent Law: Litigation and Alternative Dispute Resolution Under the North American Free Trade Agreement.

CIRT continued to add to the literature of transboundary resources. In cooperation with the Natural Resources Journal, it published Part 1 of Managing North American Transboundary Water Resources, perhaps the most important comparative study to date of the U.S.-Mexico International Boundary and Water Commission and the U.S.-Canadian International Joint Commission. It included the following articles:

- Emerging Boundary Environmental Challenges and Institutional Issues: Mexico and the United States by Alberto Székely
- The International Joint Commission and Changing Canada-United States Boundary Relations by David LeMarquand
- Subnational Governance and the International Joint Commission: Local Management of United States and Canadian Boundary Waters by David J. Allee
- Innovation and Reform in Transboundary Resource Management: A Critical Look at the International Boundary and Water Commission: United States and Mexico by Stephen Mumme

CIRT also published several articles under its monograph series and Volume 7 of the Transboundary Resources Report.

The Natural Resources Center

The Natural Resources Center (NRC) was occupied with projects which focused on sustainable development in the Rio Grande basin. The Center, which represents the University in the Rio Grande/Rio Bravo Sustainable Development Initiative received a $200,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to cover the costs of preparing for and hosting a basin-wide conference to be held in El Paso.

With the help of students in the UNM Clinical Law Program, the NRC created a nonprofit corporation, Los Rios Institute. The Institute will assume the community action and institutional development functions which have grown out of NRC teaching and research activities.

The NRC began the transfer of funding and administrative responsibilities for the Rio Grande Basin Consortium to the Consortium itself. Created in 1990 through NRC-supported projects, the Consortium is a clearing house for environmental resources data.

Law School Publications

The School's two law journals, the New Mexico Law Review and the Natural Resources Journal, each had an active and full publication year. The Law Review published five issues, including the first issue of the United States-Mexico Law Journal. The issue contains the proceedings of the U.S.-Mexico Law Institute's first annual conference. The Law Review saw a significant increase in the number of applications in 1992-93. There were 37 staff members on Law Review in 1992-93.

The Natural Resources Journal published four regular issues which included articles on a range of topics, including dolphin-safe tuna, the legal regulation of sustainable development in Australia, the use of water pricing to enhance efficiency in irrigation in the U.S. and Mexico, Japan's forest resource utilization, transboundary river basin in the Middle East, and harnessing international law to determine Israeli-Palestinian Water Rights.

The Natural Resources Journal also published two Special Issues entitled "Managing North American Transboundary Water Resources."

2. SIGNIFICANT PLANS AND RECOMMENDATIONS FOR THE NEAR FUTURE

The dean anticipates evaluating and strengthening several areas of the law school in the near future.

Latin American Law at UNM

The law school will continue to support the Guanajuato Summer Program and The U.S.-Mexico Law Institute. In addition, the law school intends to strengthen its Latin American and Mexican Law emphasis by encouraging more research by law school faculty collaborating with scholars from Mexico.

Clinical Program

The law school intends to examine the clinical program as part of a curricular review. A committee has been appointed to look at faculty staffing and program design.

Computers

The need for computer support for instructional, research and administrative purposes continues to exceed the financial resources of the law school. The computer system in place does not meet the current demands placed on it, and cannot meet the future demands of faculty and students.

The law school needs a budget for computer hardware, software, and maintenance. Without a budget, no long-term or short-term planning for computer applications is possible.

The Law School Facility

The lack of adequate faculty and administrative office space continues to be a problem. The law school building has no office space for adjunct faculty or for emeritus faculty. Some educational and research programs have been limited due to lack of space. Other programs have been moved to buildings some distance from the law school.

The law school needs an addition to the building or a new building adjacent to the law school. A new building could house some of the research and service institutes of the law school and open up space in the law school proper for offices and rooms primarily related to the teaching mission of the school.

Faculty Salaries and Research Support

Faculty salaries continue to be below national, regional, and peer averages. In addition, funds for research grants are inadequate. The law school needs additional resources for both faculty salaries and research.

Summer/Part-time Coursework

There is evidence of interest in a part-time program and summer course offerings. The law school self study and the subsequent accreditation process have focused attention on this issue. A committee will further investigate these two issues.

3. & 4. APPOINTMENTS AND SEPARATIONS TO STAFF

Visitors

Several visiting faculty members brought their expertise to the law school in 1992-93. Eugene Clark, an exchange visitor from the University of Tasmania where he is a Senior Lecturer in Law, taught Legal Research and Writing and an antitrust class. Nancy Cook continued as a Visiting Professor , assisting with the Institute for Access to Justice. Cook previously taught at the American University Law School in Washington D.C. for nine years where her specialties were appellate advocacy and clinical training and supervision. Angela Martinez, a director in the Albuquerque firm of Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin & Robb, P.A., taught Law Practice Clinic both semesters. Margaret Montoya, formerly Associate University Counsel at UNM, taught in the Institute for Access to Justice and Employment Discrimination. Andrew Schultz , on leave from Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin & Robb, P.A., taught Supreme Court Decision Making and Legislative and Administrative Processes in the spring. A 1984 UNM law school graduate, Schultz clerked for Byron White, U.S. Supreme Court and U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Alvin Rubin.

Adjuncts

The law school continued to strengthen its ties with the legal community. The following adjunct professors taught during the year: Larry Aushermann, Modrall Law Firm; Margot Ballon and Richard Bowman of the District Attorney's Office, James E. Burke, Esq.; William Dixon, Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin & Robb, P.A.; William Foote, Albuquerque psychologist; Franklin Gill, Letter of Academic Title with the law school; The Hons. Gregory Griego and John Pope, Workers Compensation Administration; Toby Grossman, Senior staff attorney with the American Indian law Center; Gary P. Kaplan, Montgomery & Andrews; Robert Kestenbaum, Sandia National Laboratories; Cynthia Kiersnowski, Nordhaus, Halton, Taylor, Taradash and Frye; James Liebman, on leave from Columbia Law School; Sharon Marinuzzi, Assistant District Attorney; Richard Monikowski, U.S. Department of Justice and Bureau of Indian Affairs; Ruth Musgrave, Director, Center for Wildlife Law, Institute of Public Law; Jennifer Pruett, Esq.; Steven Scholl, Hatch, Allen & Shepherd; Sasha Siemel, Sutin, Thayer & Brown; Marit Tully, Alternatives Director, Second Judicial District Court; and William Walker, Esq.

Permanent Faculty

The law school had a total of 29 permanent faculty in 1992-93 including 2 African Americans and 3 Hispanics. Of the 29, 10 were women. The School had three deans, one of whom was Hispanic and one a woman.

Honors and Awards

Professor Robert L. Schwartz received a Fulbright grant for the 1992-93 spring semester. Schwartz's grant was for research in the United Kingdom, Denmark, Hungary and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic under the European Regional Research Program from Jan. to May 1993. In addition, Schwartz participated in an exchange with the University of Tasmania for the fall semester and taught in the Department of Law.

A Stanford graduate, Schwartz received his law degree from Harvard. After graduating from law school, he clerked for the High Court of American Samoa in Pago Pago and practiced law in Albuquerque before joining the UNM law faculty in 1976. Schwartz held the Henry Weihofen Professorship from 1989 to 1991.

Also recognized for their research efforts were Theodore Parnall and Barbara Bergman. Parnall was appointed as the University of New Mexico Regent's Professor of Law and Bergman as the Regent's Lecturer of Law.

Three law school professors were granted tenure and promoted. Suedeen Kelly, Antoinette Sedillo Lopez, and Maureen Sanders became full professors effective 1992-93. Suedeen Kelly joined the law school faculty in the fall of 1986. She received her B.A. from the University of Rochester and the J.D. from Cornell Law School. Kelly's teaching and research interests include environmental law, administrative law, and natural resources law.

Antoinette Sedillo Lopez joined the law faculty in Jan. 1986. A UNM graduate, she received her J.D. from the University of California at Los Angeles. Her research interests include women's legal issues in Mexico and the U.S. Sedillo Lopez also joined the Southwest Hispanic Research Institute as a research faculty member.

Maureen Sanders joined the law school in 1986. She received the B.A. from Benedictine College, the M.S. Ed. from Southern Illinois University and the J.D. from the University of New Mexico. Her current research includes an insurance law textbook and a manual on qui tam litigation.

Leaves of Absence

On leave of absence during 1992-93 were Professors Willis Ellis, on sabbatical for the spring semester; Michele Hermann, on sabbatical leave for the fall semester, and Suede Kelly, on a full-year sabbatical.

Four law school professors were on leave without pay. Alfred Mathewson taught corporate law courses at St. John's University School of Law. Anita Morse worked to complete her doctorate in the School of Library and Information Science at the University of Michigan. Ann Scales visited the University of British Columbia Faculty of Law as the Walter C. Owen Professor for the spring semester, and Robert Schwartz taught at the University of Tasmania as an exchange visitor in the fall semester and spent the spring semester at the University of Granada in Spain on a Fulbright grant.

7. OUTSIDE-SPONSORED RESEARCH

In 1992-93 the law school received more than $1.5 million in contracts and grants from a variety of city, state, and federal agencies and foundations. Most of the money went to the Institute of Public Law, the nonprofit research institute founded as the public-service arm of the law school in 1969. The Center for International Transboundary Issues and the law school clinic also received significant outside funding.
