THE REPORT OF THE SCHOOL OF LAW

July 1, 1979 - June 30, 1980

ROBERT J. DESIDERIO, DEAN

I. Introduction

During March, 1979, the Law School was inspected for accreditation purposes by the American Bar Association and the Association of American Law Schools.¹ In their report, the inspection team concluded that the Law School is a unique institution, having a sound educational program, a "sense of mission and purpose," "a relaxed spirit" and "the excitement of new activity." At the same time, the team expressed "great frustration: Although so much has been accomplished, ... there is still so much to be done. The margin of unquestioned excellence is very close and yet far away."

The objectives of the past year have been to strengthen further the atmosphere and educational program recognized and applauded by the inspection team, while, at the same time, to develop a plan, or at least discuss the types of programs which will allow the Law School to attain a level of "unquestioned excellence." This report will present the major Law School activities for the past year which relate to these objectives. The report has three parts. The first concerns ¹On July 29, 1980, the American Bar Association indicated that the Law School met the Standards for Approval of Law Schools by the American Bar Association and that the Law School remains an accredited law school. The Association of American Law Schools reaccredited the Law School on December 5, 1979.

my report of the law school. The second is the report of the law library; and the third is the report of the Natural Resources Journal and New Mexico Law Review report.

What a report of this nature does not describe are those daily achievements of faculty and students, through classroom and other educational experiences, that comprise the heart of this Law School. Nor does this report present such data as student enrollment and credit hours; this information is available elsewhere.

II. General Information

A. Significant Achievements During The Academic Year

1) Faculty Retreat

In September 1979, the law faculty met in retreat at Taos. This was our first retreat in approximately seven years, and it had two purposes. First, it allowed me, as a new dean, to meet with the faculty away from daily Law School pressures. I became more familiar with individual and group faculty views, and the faculty became more aware of my thoughts. Moreover, the faculty had an opportunity to discuss among themselves the kinds of issues that seldom are discussed during normal faculty meetings.

Second, three topics dealing with broad educational issues were presented and debated. These topics involved curriculum, faculty development, and student advisement and counseling. The discussion on each topic was led by one or more faculty members who had prepared and distributed materials before the retreat. The curriculum discussion resulted in an actual proposal (presented later in this report). The other two topics have been the source of many discourses during the past year.

2) Bondurant Fellowships

The Law School presently has no funds to support student research assistants; nor does it have anything analogous to graduate or teaching assistantships. Student research assistants and tutors have been financed primarily through the Federal Work-Study program. For many reasons, this is not satisfactory.

During the past year, the Law School allocated some of its private gift funds to a new program called "The Bondurant Fellowship Program." The funds used to establish this program were donated by the late W. E. Bondurant, Jr. and are monies normally allocated to financial aid. Thirteen upperclass students were selected from a group of applicants by a faculty committee and were named Bondurant Fellows for the spring 1980 semester. Each fellow was assigned to a faculty advisor and was responsible for helping with certain of the advisor's research projects. This involvement of each Bondurant fellow was intended to be more than basic research and "cite checking;" rather, the fellow was to be an active participant in all phases of the project. Thus, the program was designed to aid a new educational component to the Law School program helping to insure the one-on-one faculty-student dimension of legal education.

The Bondurant Fellowship program has been a success. However, because inflation has substantially increased our normal financial aid needs, which in turn will demand a larger portion of the available Bondurant funds in 1980-81, it is probable that the Bondurant Fellowship Program cannot be continued.

3) Exchange Program of Legal Research with the Instituto de Investigaciones Juridicas, Universidad Nacional Autonoma de Mexico Institute

The Institute is the legal research arm of the National Autonomous University of Mexico. Most Mexican legal research emanates from the Institute.

On February 4, 1980, I met at the Law School with Dr. Jorge Carpizo, Director of the Institute, to discuss establishing an exchange program. As a result of the meeting, we agreed upon the following guidelines:

- 1) The director of the Institute and the dean of the Law School will designate members of their respective faculties to exchange visits from time to time.
- 2) During the visit, the guest will address the host faculty on a topic related to the former's research activities.
- 3) Each institution will bear all costs of faculty visits to the other institution.
- 4) The director and dean will exchange periodicals published by their respective institutions and information regarding conferences, congresses and symposia organized by them. Interested faculty will be invited to attend the conferences, congresses and symposia.

On April 24, 1980, I visited the Institute and lectured on "Research at UNM School of Law." In addition, the Institute and the Law School have been exchanging periodicals and other legal publications. Hopefully, both the Institute and the Law School will exchange faculty members next year.

4) Remote Claims Study

The Law School (through its Natural Resources Center) is currently conducting a study of land grant title problems under a $153,000 contract awarded by the Farmers' Home Administration (FmHA) of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. This study is part of a congressionally mandated review of remote land claims among Indian tribes, in predominantly black areas of the rural South, and in the Spanish Southwest.

Our portion of the study seeks to explore possible title problems resulting from Spanish and Mexican land grants in the Southwest. The contract specifically charges us with "providing accurate and useful data concerning:

- A. The amount and location of land impacted by Spanish and Mexican land grants;
- B. The extent to which the owners of such land are ineligible for private mortgage insurance, mortgage loans and Farmers' Home Administration programs;
- C. The remedies existing under State law; and,
- D. The possible alternatives to present State and Federal law."

This study, commenced in October, 1979, runs through September, 1980, and involves four members of the faculty and a team of ten law student research assistants.

5) Clinical Programs

During the year, three new clinical programs were established: an Advanced Litigation Program, a Northern New Mexico Elderly Law Clinic, and a Tax Practice Clinic.

a) Advanced Litigation Program (ALP)

ALP was established by a $40,000 grant from the U.S. Office of Education and is designed to offer an integrated clinical-academic experience. The program is open to twelve students who have completed courses in Evidence, Trial Practice, Professional Responsibility, and Criminal Procedure. The students take six hours of field work in the program, carrying a limited caseload of criminal and civil cases, and also enroll in nine hours of classroom work (two hours of Lawyering Theory and Institutional Analysis, three hours of Law and Psychiatry, three hours of Applied Litigation Exercises and one hour of Litigation Ethics). They are organized into a law firm for the general practice of law and are divided into six teams of two students, each team being assigned a caseload to be worked jointly.

b) Northern New Mexico Elderly Law Clinic

The Law School has been awarded a two-year H.E.W. $130,000 grant to operate a clinic for the elderly of Northern New Mexico. The purpose of the program is to inform the elderly about their legal rights and to train law students about problems faced by elderly people living in rural areas. It is hoped that, as a result, law students will be encouraged to practice law in rural New Mexico upon graduation. The initial year of the project had three phases. In the first, the design was completed, training materials were coordinated, and the concept was presented to the people of the villages to insure their understanding and gain their acceptance. In addition, the concept was presented to all interested agencies, educational institutions, and private individuals. The second phase involved the training of paralegals from the villages of Northern New Mexico and law students. The third phase, which lasted nine weeks during the summer of 1980, dealt with the clinical experience for paralegals and law students. Both faculty and students moved to rural Northern New Mexico and operated legal clinics in six locations (Dixon, Penasco, Questa, Taos, Picuris, and San Juan Pueblo). Students and elderly persons worked as teams under faculty supervision. In addition, the students participated in course work designed to give them an understanding and working knowledge of legal issues affecting the rural elderly. Instruction was also provided in Spanish for lawyers and in cultural values of Northern New Mexico.

The goal of this program is to learn whether:

- 1) an urban institution can provide a service in a rural area;
- 2) law students can be motivated and shown that a good public or private practice can be established in a rural area when dealing with the elderly;
- 3) self-help can be used by the elderly when dealing with government benefits; and
- 4) more professionals can be encouraged to provide services to rural elderly.

c) Tax Practice Clinic

Prior to 1980, most, if not all, of the Law School's clinical programs revolved around general civil or criminal cases. Learning experiences included courtroom or law office activities of a general law practice nature. Few experiences involved the students in administrative or specialized practice. The Tax Practice Clinic, which commenced in the spring semester of 1980, is intended to do this.

This program was established with the cooperation and approval of, but is operated independently from, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Students enrolled in the program are authorized by the U.S. Treasury Department to apply for and receive permission to engage in practice before the IRS under established guidelines.

Typically, the student practitioner will advise taxpayer clients whose income tax returns are being examined or are about to be examined by I.R.S. The student will hold a "pre-audit conference" with the client to assist him or her in preparing for the examination (audit) and, when appropriate, may accompany the client to the audit conference at I.R.S. If, as a result of the audit, adjustments to the client's income tax liability are proposed which are either questionable or unacceptable to the client, the student will assist the client in evaluating the issues and seeking their favorable disposition either by concession, negotiated settlement or appeal.

6) New Mexico State Bar Activities

Over the years the Law School has recognized that it must respond not only to the university but also to the bar. By cooperating in continuing legal education programs and other activities, we have attempted to be full participants in the legal community.

The faculty has been especially active in state and local bar programs during the past year. We have provided a board member of the Albuquerque Bar Association, a member of the Continuing Legal Education Committee, and as their biographical supplements indicate, many members of the faculty have served on various bar committees, and several continuing legal education program panelists.

The relationship between the bar associations and the Law School has been productive and cordial. Both institutions are working together; they have recognized that they are part of the same profession and share common goals.

7) Faculty Promotions and Tenure

During the past year, Professor Michelle Hermann was granted tenure. Professors Pamela B. Minzner and Charles DuMars were promoted to Professor and Professor Luis Stelzner was granted a second three year contract and promoted to Associate Professor.

8) Student Achievements

During the past year, a number of our students received national recognition for academic achievements. Our National Moot Court Team won the Rocky Mountain Regional Moot Court Competition for the fifth consecutive year and represented the region in the final competition in New York.

John Cassell, a second year student, won second place in the Le Tournea Competition for a paper in Law and Medicine.

Michael Schwarz, a third year student, won the Nathan Burkin Prize for the best paper on copyright law submitted from this Law School.

B. Significant Plans and Recommendations for the Near Future

A major objective for the next year is to review our educational program and to implement new curricular ideas. Three projects are planned. First, a new curriculum for the first semester of the first year is being developed. As a result of discussion at the faculty retreat, the Curriculum Committee formulated, during the past year, a model first year curriculum. This model focuses upon the analytical methods and skills that are the goals of the first year, and not upon the subject-areas. Implementation requires that faculty members now develop course topics and materials to present the different components of the program.

The second area of curriculum planning concerns the third year. In response to the growing concern nationally about the third year educational experience, this Law School has been discussing a new "practicum" curriculum. The practicums would be interdisciplinary and would require each student to use all the skills, knowledge and training learned during the first two years of law school. Implementation of this third year program would necessitate redesign of the second year curriculum, which would focus on mastery of the basic information necessary for later participation in a practicum.

The Curriculum Committee is charged with responsibility for planning the implementation of the above proposals.

The third area of curriculum review concerns the clinical program. This Law School is recognized as having the most comprehensive clinical program; our program has become the model for other programs nationally and internationally. The program is now twelve years old. It has grown rapidly. We feel that the opportunity is present to review its objectives and methods, since the nonclinical educational program is now being studied. An ad hoc committee has been charged with the responsibility of studying our clinical programs and to recommend any changes, additions or modifications in the program.

C. Appointments to the Staff

During the past year, the following individuals were appointed to the staff of the Law School. Paul Nathanson and Andreas Deaguero were added as staff in the Northern New Mexico Elderly Law Clinic; Ed Macy and Bruce Kelly were added as staff attorneys in our Centro Legal Misdemeanor defense program.

In addition, two visiting professors joined the faculty. Professor Donald Weidner of Florida State University Law School visited during the fall semester and Professor Margaret Henry, now at Catholic University Law School, visited during the spring semester.

D. Separations for Staff

During the past year, John Walker who was a staff attorney in the Centro Legal program resigned his position.

III. Faculty Biographical Information

This section contains the supplemental biographical information for each faculty member. The biographical do present vividly some important information.

This is an active faculty. They are involved extensively in research and service activities. At the same time, the faculty are excellent teachers, as our students will attest. Moreover, the faculty is participating in legal education nationally and internationally. Individuals are active in the Association of American Law Schools, American Bar Association, Law School Admission Council and the Council of Legal Education Opportunity (CLEO). In addition it is worth noting that in the Spring 1980, Professor William MacPherson, Director of the Clinical Program, was an Asian Foundation consultant to and participant in a Filipino conference on clinical education in Manila. He also visited many Filipino law schools advising those law schools about clinical programs.

The faculty has also given themselves unselfishly to public service activities. Besides the organized bar activities mentioned in Part II of this report, the faculty have consulted with attorneys in major law cases, written legal briefs and memoranda and represented clients who were indigent or who presented claims involving important legal issues.

Lastly, the faculty's research and scholarship activity has been prodigious. As their biographical information indicates, they have written books and monographs, published law review articles, participated in sponsored research projects, written briefs and completed memoranda for state agencies.
