

Fall 11-2017

"Consider this my trigger warning": Safe spaces, college campuses, and a current debate

Joseph L. Flores
University of New Mexico

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/el\_centro\_research

---

Recommended Citation

Flores, Joseph L.. "Consider this my trigger warning": Safe spaces, college campuses, and a current debate." (2017).
https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/el\_centro\_research/20

This Student Paper is brought to you for free and open access by the El Centro de la Raza at UNM Digital Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Research Supported by El Centro by an authorized administrator of UNM Digital Repository. For more information, please contact disc@unm.edu.

Joseph L. Flores
University of New Mexico
Department of Communication and Journalism
Presented at the National Communication Association
Dallas, TX, November 2017

“Consider this my trigger warning”: Safe spaces, college campuses, and a current debate”

At the institutional level, safe spaces and university policy continues to be a source of contention. Moreover, as contention at the university level continues to represent movements in the larger sociocultural context, safe spaces, diversity, and multiculturalism continue to push policy and reactions to policy based on differential needs. Using discourse by university officials, this research situates contexts of institutional power, educational institutions, and social norms of collegiate experiences as part of a larger conversation. By placing multiculturalism and diversity at the forefront in the understanding of safe spaces on college campuses, it interrogates the historical and structural reaches of hegemonic power in a contemporary context and setting.