VALUE OF MESMERISM.

DREAD OF FRESH AIR CARRIED TO A LUDICROUS EXTENT.

Buildings That Are Dump, 18 Scuttling and Puffing—A Curious Disease of Cold Water—Chills, Fever of Malarial Origin—Contrast for the Whites.

Most cities have some reason to show for their location. Boston sits by her broad bay, Chicago by the lake, New Orleans in the heart of her imperial river, Guaymas and Zacatecas by the side of their rich mines, but there is no sound or sensible reason for the location of the City of Mexico in a low and swampy tract, when right at hand, every building of the city is surrounded by a sanitary conditions and certain to afford scope for the amplest possible expansion of the town.

Meantime the death rate is extraordinary, and what should be one of the most healthy cities on the globe, standing as it does at more than 7,000 feet above the sea level, is one of the most unhealthy. The ravages of what may be termed diseases engendered by dirt and dampness are something frightful—typhus fever, the malarial typhoid, amebiasis, which is always existent somewhere, malarial fever, dysentery, etc., carry off thousands every year. The lot of the poorer classes, and of those between poverty and comfortable circumstances is a hard one. Their dwellings are low, smoky, ill smelling, pestiferous. It is impossible to estimate the death rate is very high, but among the well to do people who live on what is here called the "primer piso," or first floor, or, in New England, the second story, the mortality is not greater than in Boston. The mortality of the climate is that its lack of oxygen renders recovery from sickness very difficult. Once let yourself run down, and it is hard getting up again. The language of the climate, in fact, is that of a warning to live the hard way, and it is the plea of the doctors to send patients out of the city as soon as it is possible to remove them.

ROOMS HEATED AT NIGHT. Out on the hillside the country people are robust and merry, all unless they happen to be of the class who try to live pedantically hermetically sealed at night. This prejudice against the night air is very great and widespread. I remember that right within the habitability of this city, a doctor's office was kept at a distance eight of their lives. They breathe their own effluvia, and pine away to the profit of the doctors and the drug shop. This fact accounts for the many spruced and sallow complexions one sees. People who have traveled, or those who are of the middle class, and have studied the matter, let the night air circulate in their apartments. Their good blood and clear complexions testify to their absence of hygienic laws.

The dread of the fresh air is often carried to a ludicrous extent. People sit for three hours in a dirty, stuffy theatre and breathe the air of the sewers underneath the floor, while all the human exhalations which contaminate the unfiltered air, and then, on going out into the comparatively pure air of the street, they have to breathe the air of the sewers and the miasma which emanates from the unfiltered air, and then, on going out into the comparatively pure air of the street, they have to breathe the air of the sewers and the miasma which emanates from the unfiltered air.

A curious prejudice exists among many people here against cold water when they have a "catarrh" or cold in the head, or even a tooth-ache in the lozes. For weeks, till the cold has gone, they resolutely refrain from touching water. Another popular prejudice here is that which impels a family to move out of a house when any member of it has died. For this reason it is so difficult to be cautious in taking a house or apartments till you have made certain that no one has recently died therein of a contagious disease. So far does this prejudice go that many people abandon their old homes on the death of a member of the family.

CHILDREN FEAR OF DEATH. It does not seem to be so much a superstition as a childish fear of death. Any yet these same people who would not consent to remain in a house thoroughly and scientifically disinfected, with new wall paper and new paint, will move to a house with a stagnant swampy air at hand, and will shut themselves up in their rooms at night like hermits in a cell. The old houses here show in their construction the dread of air and sunlight. With little narrow windows, brick chimneys and light covers, they were certain to become miasmas to all who breathed the air of the rooms. The windows of the old houses were built so that never by any chance could a breath of air get in to disturb the work. All this the white man did. But the Indian, being mainly to the open air, the high windows is a different sort of creature, a man who can make sixty miles or more a day. He is who eats with appetite his fragrant meal, and has the good sense to lead his dogs when they do not grant his requests immediately. These are the men and women with broad chests, and a color that shows red blood and good circulation. They have missed the elements of the white race, but have preserved their lives and their vigor in the heart of the Indian their lack a contempt for the sickly colored white man. He regards his sickly faced brother as a man of evil and endless misdeeds, who must have at hand an opportunity to slip and a death, who does not sit in the sun, unless protected by servants, dogs, and guns. The white man takes a horse for a journey of five miles, the Indian will go twelve miles in a day on foot, and will be well and ready for another tramp the next day, when the white man's horse would be worn up with trouble the same amount of travel. Generally a respectable man, the Indian of the Mexican species is a good natured, kind, and a successful man of life. He eats a liberal meal of cornmeal tortillas, a drink of pulque or water, and wears out the most outlandish duster in town. Largely it is the good old Indian, therefore, that makes him the strongest and enduring man that he is—May to Cor. Boston Herald.

THE THERAPEUSIS OF HYPNOTISM AS A MEDICAL STUDY.

An Anesthetic as Perfect as Ether—Story of the Severely Stricken Case—Fidelious Responses—Can Crime Be Committed by the Aid of Mesmerism?

It is conceivable that mesmerism might be used as an anesthetic. If he have heart disease, for instance, an exciting or violent episode, a rupture of the heart, or a convulsion of great violence, it might prove injurious or even fatal, just as it might in his normal condition. This possibility is abundantly offset by the value of mesmerism as a therapeutic agent. The responsive can be made so docile as to receive a water which he has been told is whisky, as to exhibit all symptoms of extreme sobriety; can be made docile to any extent by being told that he is at sea in a storm, and can be made physically affected by an imaginary medicine. His temperature can be changed, his eye dilated and his pulse quickened. Mesmerism is as perfect an anesthetic as ether, and as harmless as water. Any mesmerized person can at once, by a single stroke of the hand, be rendered insensible to pain, and can have a tooth drawn, a calvarium removed, a cancer cut out, or an amputation without feeling the slightest pain. This has been so often demonstrated that expectations frequently take place under its influence in the Paris hospitals, and it is successfully employed in obstetrics. Though only a fraction of patients will be found eligible as candidates for this anesthetic of pain, its utility is so obvious it cannot be before medical societies will take up the therapeutic of mesmerism as a serious study, and many surgeons will be required to have as practical a knowledge of it as of any part of the pharmacopoeia.

It is quite erroneous to suppose that the conduct of the responsive is directed in detail by the operator. He only suggests the general line of thought, and each responsive pursues it according to his own knowledge, experience or preparation. I say to my responsive, for instance, that I have a wonderful colored cow with seven heads. They all want to see it. I call their attention to the imaginary stable door near by; they look toward it, and when I snap my fingers around it, a seven-headed cow enters. Now, by questioning them it becomes obvious that they all see a different cow. Unless I have designated her color one sees a white cow, another a red cow, and so on. Then I tell them that the cow dances, can walk and keep time with music. I hand one a cane, telling him it is a flute, and that he is an excellent performer, and he goes through the motions of playing it, and he can sing. They all hear different tunes, but the exhibition is satisfactory. I now add that the cow can sing along a different part with each mouth—can sing seven ballads at once. At this point there is some incredulity expressed. They see the cow stand up on her hind legs and begin to sing, and this, I say as well as add, is the narrative of an actual experiment.

Five of the six mesmerized persons believed that she sang. "She is singing 'The Willow,'" said one. "And 'A Warbler's Song,'" said another. "I hear singing," said the incredulous one, turning to me. "Anne Laurie, isn't it? How do you work her—the machinery, I mean?" The others laughed at him. "Why, the cow sings," said a young lady. "Can't you hear her sing? Can't you see her sing?" "She looks as if she sang," conceded the incredulous one. "I see her mouth move all the time. She sings as if she sang; but she doesn't sing. Cow don't sing." "Very well, what is it, then?" asked one of the others. "A tube and a hole in the floor," said the incredulous one, "perhaps ventriloquism." "Ah," said the first, "decidedly ventriloquism does not seem like that I've made a study of ventriloquism."

"Well, I've made a study of cow," persisted the scuffer obstinately. "Sometimes I turn the responsive into children and have them play school with little fun; sometimes I transport them over ocean to Africa or Japan on the enchanted carpet, where for a brief space they enjoy all the delights of travel, sometimes we participate in battles, in political campaigns, in exciting trials, and sometimes I transport them to the farthest corners of the globe. I have introduced and interviewed, the intelligent responsive furnishing both questions and answers in a curious and amusing way, that is highly entertaining."

Not only the reason sometimes rebuffs doubt, but the conscience also. As a rule responsive can be completely dominated and made to do anything of which they are physically capable. They could give Buffalo Bill, and really make her to assume his character, but when called for a locomotive, or attack one another with deadly weapons. But there are some exceptions. I was unable to overcome the fear of one of my responsive, when I called him to go to the imaginary house in the park. He refused to go, and said it was "difficult to kill an Indian."

A young lady, one of the brightest sensitives I have ever seen, steadfastly refused to play cards. I tell her she is Buffalo Bill, and really make her to assume his character, but when called for a locomotive, or attack one another with deadly weapons. But there are some exceptions. I was unable to overcome the fear of one of my responsive, when I called him to go to the imaginary house in the park. He refused to go, and said it was "difficult to kill an Indian."

Fighting for the Canaries. The fishing for the Washington Territory canaries is done with nets, and is carried on more extensively than anywhere else on this continent. It is the favorite and favorite of the Territory, and is employed. The setting is usually done at night, and an idea of the immensity of the catch can be had when it is known that over $3,000,000 worth of the fish was sent from the Columbia river district last year. Net fishing is also carried on extensively on the St. Lawrence and other Canadian rivers.—Globe-Democrat.
