The Report of the School of Law
July 1, 1960 - June 30, 1961
Vern Countryman, Dean

I. GENERAL SCHOOL INFORMATION

A. Significant achievements during the academic year 1960-61

The law school graduated its twelfth class of 8 members. There are now 222 graduates of the University of New Mexico School of Law. One additional student will complete the requirements for the LL.B. degree during the summer session. Of our total graduates, 170 are now practicing law in New Mexico and they constitute about 20% of the practicing bar of the state.

During the year 1960-61, the new combined six-year course of college and law study approved by the University faculty last year and described in last year's report was approved by both of our accrediting agencies—the Association of American Law Schools and the American Bar Association. With this approval, we will be able to put the program into full effect Semester I, 1961-62.

By action approved by the University faculty on April 3, 1961, the law school has also raised the requirements for all students entering the school other than through the combined program. The minimum requirements are now a baccalaureate degree from an accredited college or university based upon at least a 2.0 or C average, or completion of three-fourths of the work acceptable for a baccalaureate degree in residence at an accredited college or university with a cumulative average of 2.5. But these are only minimum requirements. Final selection of applicants will be based upon an appraisal of the content as well as the scholastic record of undergraduate work, scores in required legal aptitude tests and, if necessary, a personal interview.

This revision represents a departure from the quantitative standard which became effective Semester I, 1960-61, then a prior baccalaureate degree was required for all entering students. But nothing in our experience tends to justify that requirement. Prior to 1960, when the degree was not required, 48% of our students nonetheless had a prior degree before entering the school. The law school performance of the prior-degree group was indistinguishable from the performance of those who entered law school after three years of college work.

The attrition rate in the first year of the class which entered after the degree requirement was imposed was 67%, of which 20% represents suspensions, 27% represents those who dropped out while on probation and 20% represents those who dropped out while in good standing. The comparable figures for the school's fourteen year history are: total attrition, 64%; suspensions, 23%; dropped while on probation, 19%; dropped while in good standing, 22%.

The revision does represent a raising of qualitative admission requirements which is amply justified by the above figures on attrition. With improved admissions standards, the total of 42% representing those who in the past were suspended or who dropped out while in scholastic difficulty should be substantially reduced.
In March, 1961, the school published the first issue of the Natural Resources Journal. Our estimate of the interest in such a Journal was borne out by the fact that the first issue went to a subscription list of more than 600. That issue contained articles on various aspects of natural resources use and development by five lawyers, one geographer and one economist and, in the New Mexico Section, articles on various aspects of state law by one former and two present members of the law faculty and by three law students. We are satisfied that the quality of the work published fully meets our aspirations.

By legislation enacted in the 1961 session of the state legislature, the five Justices of the State Supreme Court were for the first time authorized to employ law clerks to assist them with their work, a practice followed by the judges of the federal courts and of many other state courts. Four of the five clerks employed by our Court for 1961-62 are graduates of this school.

B. Significant plans and recommendations for the near future

The law school faces two serious and related problems: enrollments and scholarship funds.

The problem of declining enrollments is a national rather than a local problem. Total law school enrollments in the United States have declined from 56,102 in 1949 to 43,671 in 1960, a 21% drop. Our enrollments approximated the same pattern until 1959, dropping from 116 in 1948 to 85 in 1959, a decline of 26%.
But in 1960, with the introduction of the prior degree requirement, enrollment declined to 59, reflecting an entering class of only 35 as against 52 for 1959.

We believe that, in large part, the decline in enrollment both nationally and locally is due to the competing glamour of a scientific career in the modern world. In co-operation with the State Bar's Committee on the Law School we are planning to initiate pre-law clubs in the various high schools, colleges and universities in the state in an effort to interest more students in the law as a career and in this school in particular.

In part, too, as mentioned in our last report, our own difficulty is that we are unable to compete for superior New Mexico undergraduate students with other law schools whose scholarship funds are more substantial. We recently surveyed the scholarship funds available in ten other law schools in this region for the year 1959-60, and found the average to be $3,000 per annum and the range to be from $250 to $11,775 per annum. The large eastern schools which make a deliberate effort to attract students from western states have, of course, much greater scholarship funds. Tuition scholarships allocated to this law school and private gifts to the school make available $2,940 per year in scholarship funds which may be awarded to only eleven students per year, the largest award being the $500 non-resident tuition scholarship and the largest cash award being $250 per year.

The dearth of scholarship funds bears also upon the problem of the attrition rate. While we have no precise records of the reasons motivating the 22% of our students who drop out while in good academic standing, we know that financial difficulty is the chief reason.

We have recently completed a drive among our alumni to raise an Alumni Fund for the law school with a view to using at least a part of it for scholarship aid. The drive has yielded $3,546 in cash and $1,780 in pledges payable in the next two years. In conjunction with a special committee appointed by the State Bar Commissioners to work with the faculty on problems of the law school, we are now planning an appeal to the state bar association for contributions to a Scholarship Fund.

C. Appointments to staff

Effective September 1, 1960, Jack L. Kremer was appointed Assistant Professor of Law. Mr. Kremer holds the B.A. and M.A. degrees from Columbia University and the LL.B. and LL.M. degrees from New York University. He is currently completing requirements at New York University for the J.S.D. degree. Mr. Kremer devotes one-half of his time to teaching and one-half to editing and managing the Natural Resources Journal. His appointment brings the total law school faculty to nine, the first increase since 1949.

E. Gifts

The Albuquerque Journal Publishing Company, which made similar $10,000 gifts in 1958 and 1959, in 1960 made a gift of $5,000 to the law school library to be used for special collections in honor of the memory of T. M. Pepperday. These gifts have been of extreme value to the law school, which faces a tremendous task in building an adequate law library for the use of students and the legal profession.

Following the death of Dean Emeritus Alfred L. Gausewitz on May 31, 1960, and at the request of his family, friends and admirers made contributions to the law school to create a fund in his memory. Contributions now total $12,341.59. The Albuquerque Bar Association, which had for some years past contributed $50 per year to an Alfred L. Gausewitz scholarship, has now agreed to increase its contribution by the amount necessary to supplement income from this fund so that a $150 scholarship may be awarded in Dean Gausewitz's memory.

In early 1960 the law school began a campaign to raise funds to finance the publication of the Natural Resources Journal during its first three or four years while circulation is being built up. Appeals addressed to private companies, organisations and individuals yielded $7,092.65, almost exactly one-half of our $14,000 goal. We now have an application pending with Resources for The Future, Inc. and have been informally advised that it will make a $5,000 grant to the Journal.
As already reported, our alumni have contributed $3,846 and pledged an additional $4,780 payable in the next two years to a Law School Alumni Fund. Pending the payment of pledges, we have arranged with the University Comptroller to invest $2,500 of these funds and will use the income to provide a $125 scholarship.
