VILLA CONTINUES ADVANCING OVER CITY OF MEXICO

Vera Cruz, May 5.—Francisco Villa, the rebel commander, may not make his intended descent on Mexico City before the lapse of another three months, according to a prominent business man who arrived today from the capital.

The refugee who has just completed negotiations with President Huerta for the removal of a train today of bullion from the mining districts, in the vicinity of the capital, was arrested. Huerta still is sending federal troops northward, as he apparently dreads more the possible approach of General Villa than an advance of the Americans.

General Villa is proceeding leisurely, says the refugee, if he has the intention of moving on the capital. Both Monterey and Saltillo are believed in Mexico City to have been evacuated by the federals who are said to have fallen back on San Luis Potosi, where they are understood by the government to be threatened by the revolutionists, but are still holding out.

General Huerta, he asserts, has done nothing to show he anticipates a forward movement of the American army or expects in the event of such a movement to offer serious resistance.

Bombs Manufactured.

The government powder factory is reported to be turning out daily some 7,000 dynamite bombs. These are understood to be intended for defense against an attack on the capital by General Villa, or Emiliano Zapata, the southern rebel.

The refugee says that except for shipping a dozen or more cannon to the vicinity of Paso del Macho, the headquarters of General Gustavo Maas on the Mexican railway, and a number to General Guillermo Rubio Navarrete, at Jalapa, on the Inter-Oceanic railroad, and supplies of dynamite for mining the bridges on the railroad, nothing further has been done by General Huerta to prepare for resistance on the road from Vera Cruz to the capital.

The business man who narrated these facts called on General Maas at Paso del Macho, having been furnished a safe conduct by General Huerta.

Small Force Under Maas.

From personal observation the refugee estimated that General Maas had less than 1,000 men under his orders.

General Navarrete, who is said to have entered from Vera Cruz a few days after the American occupation, and to have moved about freely in disguise, is now reported to have from 500 to 600 men with him at Jalapa.

Events in the capital since the taking of Vera Cruz, the refugee said, were street demonstrations during the first few days, when various American business houses were stoned by the mobs. These demonstrations were apparently ended by a proclamation issued by a number of prominent merchants in the capital whose sympathies were with the revolution. They endeavored to offset the alarming falsifications published by the government press. They also tried to relate with truth the state of affairs at Vera Cruz.

Mexican Merchants Act Well

One of the direct results of the merchants' action was the abandonment of a gigantic demonstration projected by the Spanish colony, based upon the widely circulated report that the Americans had sunk the Spanish cruiser Emperador Carlos V, in the harbor of Vera Cruz and had declared war against Spain.

Under cover of this proposed demonstration, it was reliably reported that a number of Mexicans intended to make a general attack on the Americans and to sack and set fire to their property on the assumption that the blame would be placed on the Spaniards.

Government officials in the capital, he says, for the most part made efforts to protect foreigners.

The confiscation of arms, except those taken from the United States, was without official sanction and it was stated that the automobiles would be returned to their owners and those responsible for the appropriation sent to jail where it is possible to fix the blame.

Huerta Not Concerned.

Mexico City, he said, was filled with rumors that General Huerta had resigned and disappeared, but the provisional president in the meantime went about the city with the customary freedom and without a guard, dining in public restaurants and giving no outward appearance of the strain under which he was living.

In the capital American and other foreign business houses, he declared, have reopened and are experiencing little difficulty in their affairs.

Col. Locket to Take Command

Trinidad, Colo., May 4.—Major W. A. Holbrook, said tonight that Col. James Lockett, commanding the 11th United States cavalry, would reach Trinidad at 7:30 tomorrow to take supreme command of the federal forces in Colorado. The officers and men of the 11th, travelling in seven trains, are expected to begin arriving shortly after their commander.

With the arrival of the reinforcements, it is expected that the negotiations for the surrender of arms by all parties will be pushed to a conclusion. Already the guards of the Colorado Fuel & Iron company at the Walsen and Rouse mines, in Huerfano county, have turned over their guns to the soldiers who were stationed to guard the mines. In Huerfano county the strikers have agreed to deliver up all their weapons to Captain C. C. Smith on Wednesday.

Representatives of both the Colorado Fuel & Iron company and the Victor-American Fuel company have expressed willingness to disarm their guards as rapidly as their mines come under the protection of United States troops.

Today Major Holbrook inaugurated the policy of furnishing guards for paymasters of both the strikers and mine operators. The Colorado Fuel & Iron company paymaster went to Sopris under a federal guard. In similar fashion the miners distributed strike benefits at various points in the Segundo neighborhood.

Major Holbrook planned to meet Colonel Lockett upon his arrival and make a report of the situation in the coal fields and the activities of the federal troops.

Baseball.

Belen was again victorious in a game with the "Red Sox" team of Albuquerque on the local diamond last Sunday afternoon. The game was well played throughout, but at no stage of the game did the visitors seem to be "in it" with our fast aggregation. Following is the score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Belen	1	0	4	2	3	0	0	0	0	10	10	1
Red Sox	0	0	0	0	2	0	0	0	0	2	4	4

Batteries: Red Sox, Armijo and Sanchez; Belen, Gutierrez and Gilbert.

Bridge to be Built

Farmington, N. M., May 4.—The county commissioners of San Juan county have published a call for bids for a bridge across the La Plata river just below Farmington. The bridge is to be a one-span steel high truss structure, one hundred and twenty feet long, with fourteen-foot roadway, with a capacity of one hundred pounds live weight to each square foot of floor space. The piers are to be of concrete, fourteen feet above low water line. This will be one of the most important bridges in the county as all travel by freighting teams hauling merchandise from the depot at Farmington, the end of the railroad, to the Fruitland stores and the government agency and school at Shiprock will pass over it.

The new steel government bridge at Shiprock is now under course of construction, the high waters not yet interfering with the work. This bridge will be completed some time in July or August.

Both of these bridges are im-

Gallup, N. M., May 5.—Three trains loaded with Mexican refugees, the advance guard of the more than 5,000 that have until recently been interned at Fort Bliss, reached Wingate station, seventeen miles east of here, early this morning, and for three hours were busy discharging their cargoes of human freight. The trains which arrived today contained about 2,500 people, and the work of unloading, which began at 5 o'clock, was not finished until after 8.

It was a strange and motley horde of humanity that swarmed down upon the usually quiet little town of Wingate. Every class was represented—the richest and the poorest—the highest and the lowest—men, women and children, and weird and uncanny were the scenes enacted. Many of them seemed not to understand what was being done with them, and on nearly every face was a dazed, puzzled expression.

The women of the party especially seemed to be frightened and hardly in possession of their wits. "We have done no harm—take us back to Mexico," was a cry not infrequently heard.

Marched to Barracks.

As soon as the work of unloading the refugees was accomplished the march of three miles from the railroad station to the barracks at Fort Wingate was begun. Four troops of cavalry which have recently been sent from Fort Meade as a temporary garrison, acted as an escort to the refugees. There the wards of Uncle Sam were placed in stockades which were hurriedly constructed after the order was given for the removal of the refugees from Fort Bliss.

Eight Generals in Party.

Hight generals were included in the party, including Jose Ynez Salazar, who is soon to be tried in Santa Fe for an alleged violation of the neutrality laws. Tall, robust and dignified in appearance, Salazar refused to have anything to say in reply to questions.

The bandit Castillo, a Buffalo Bill type, with dark piercing eyes, was also in the party. Castillo smoked incessantly and would have little to say to anybody. A gray-haired man, who was constantly on the watch as if feeling the responsibility for the safety of the party on his shoulders, proved to be General Castro, the ranking officer of the federal army who abandoned Ojinaga to its fate and surrendered to the American forces after crossing the Rio Grande. General Mercado, another high officer in the federal army, was also conspicuous in the party.

The car which contained these distinguished military officials was under strong guard and also had on board the wives and children of the officers, many of them richly dressed, in striking contrast to the poverty apparent in the apparel of the mass of the party. A special escort was accorded this branch of the party from the station to the post.

Mrs. Mack, who left for her home in Clinton, Iowa, several weeks ago, arrived last Wednesday with her little son.

Important links in the highway that San Juan county people are now about to create, to extend from Durango to Gallup.

PLACING HIS AFFECTION
By HARRISON SMITH.
Johnny Hawley took his second cup of tea, absent-mindedly put in two lumps of sugar, which he never used, and stirred it thoughtfully. The fire crackled on the wide hearth, and never had he seen Philippa look so altogether adorable as she did that blowy March afternoon.
"As I was saying," said Johnny, with a sidelong glance at Philippa and trying to hold his voice to its usual conversational tone, "I've been very, very wretched of late."
"Have you?" said she. "I think I know what's the matter," she hazarded.
"Do you?" asked Johnny. "Let's hear your diagnosis of the unfortunate case."
"You're in love," said she, very demurely, and Johnny in his joy of the moment started so violently that he all but upset his tea.
"Say, you're some little old mind reader, Philippa," he declared. "How'd you guess it?"
"It's too easy," said she with a little sigh. "Anyone who knows you at all could guess that about you of late, Johnny."
"That's dead right," said Johnny. "Anybody could have guessed it, couldn't they?"
"No reason why not," said she. "I can even tell whom you are in love with."
"Go ahead," said Johnny. "Don't let any false modesty stand in your way."
Philippa said very calmly: "The reason you are wretched is because of the person you're so much in love with, Johnny, and that person is—yourself."
A dainty Sevres cup was smashed and a goodly quantity of perfectly good tea was slopped about promiscuously as Johnny, who had half risen from his chair, sat down in it again with rather too much suddenness.
"You're terribly in love with yourself, Johnny," she went on calmly. "You think only of your own pleasure and comfort. You have altogether too much money for your own good. It's made you dreadfully selfish."
"You mean I should do things?" he asked weakly, aware from her pause that something was expected of him conversationally.
"Exactly."
"Well, I'll give away more of it," said he. "What's your pet charity now Philippa? Tell me and I'll write out a regular old whale of a check for it—one that will really make your eyes pop out."
"Oh, Johnny Hawley!" she chided. "Always a point of view like that! You think just giving money, when you have oodles of it—more than you can possibly spend yourself—means being unselfish. You wouldn't miss the money. You'd forget ten minutes after you'd given it. You'd never feel the difference. That will never cure your wretchedness. You've got to give something of yourself—something personal, something really worth while before ever you'll feel any better."
"There's Ned Hawkins," she said musingly at length. "Ned's going at awful pace. Money won't help him any, because he has too much of it all ready. But personal work will. Ned's young and foolish and a bit of personal work with him might make a man out of him."
"Oh, that silly fool?" he questioned. "The quicker his kind go to the devil the better for all concerned. I couldn't do anything for him."
"It would be disagreeable, wouldn't it?" she said mockingly. "I forgot you couldn't possibly do anything the least bit distasteful to you?"
"What'd you think of me if I did succeed in making Ned pull up a bit?" he asked.
"Your reward would be in the feeling you had of having done something really worth while for once—in being really unselfish, for I realize it's going to be a particularly disagreeable task straightening Ned out."
Johnny took his hat and stick, said good-by, apologized for the cup he had so awkwardly broken, and went down to the club. He sat there for a long time staring out of the big front window, thinking deeply and turning many things over in his mind. Then he saw Ned Hawkins coming up the steps, none too steadily—with two of his closest and most disreputable cronies. Johnnie got out of his chair, squared his shoulders, rolled up his eyes as if he said he knew he was acting the fool but should persist in that course, none the less, and went into the hall where Ned Hawkins was having a most unseemly and undignified verbal quarrel with the angry hall man.
Eight months later Johnny Hawley was again sitting before that wide and cozy hearth with a cup of tea in his hands. Philippa was lovelier than ever.
"I've heard all about it—what you've done for Ned," said she. "You had a perfectly dreadful time, didn't you, and it was simply awful some of the things he did and said about you? But you stuck it out and you made a man of him. It was splendid. You must feel awfully good about it."
"I don't," said Johnny.
"You're not still wretched?"
"I most certainly am."
"Well, what's the matter now?"
"I'm not cured. I'm still in love,"
"With yourself?"
"Neither it, no. You know I'm not and never was. You know what it is I'm in love with. It's Ned."
"Oh, yes, I've known that all along too," she said.
