According to a report released July 15 in London by the International Sugar Organization, Cuban sugar exports in the November 1991-March 1992 period totaled 2.75 million metric tons, compared to 2.84 million during the same period the previous year. After pointing out that the decline was considerably lower than expected, the ISO said export figures demonstrate that Havana has been able to rapidly adapt to new economic parameters created by political change in Eastern Europe.
