Tentative plans for the spring semester call for offering all scheduled courses with the exceptions of 104L, 108L, 110, 162, 172, 174L, 191b, and 198. Probably a new course on North-western America and Northeastern Asia will be introduced. The net result for the year 1937-38 will be the elimination of courses on physical anthropology, linguistics, dendrochronology, Pueblo sociology, Old World classical archaeology, and ceramics. This should give the students in the department an enforced opportunity to acquire a broad anthropologic background, rather than a too-limited and specialized knowledge of certain aspects of Southwestern archaeology. Such a broader background is absolutely necessary for graduate work in the leading American departments of Anthropology.
