The Miser's Brood

By

JEROME SPRAUCE

I want you to understand," said Mrs. Iverson, wistfully, "that I can't afford it. Times are bad—very bad—made so bad by the war, you know. When your mother was young she didn't expect such things—young people weren't permitted to dance. He flucked a crumh of his coat as he finished his harangue and went out of the dining room.

"Mother," he said, as he saw three sisters, expensively, as their father's mother, do his mother. He certainly, at least, if we can't go in our old ragged, named Gloria. "It's just not on our own account, mother, that we hold it—because of what people say.

"Yesterday we heard a man marmalade enough. "No, mother," cried Beverly, who was the eldest. "Oh, do, Beth, exported, as it is, for a woman's household. "I know," Beth was repentant, at once. "I know, but if father only—"

"You can't make him, dear, by that manner of talking to him. He's—no—changed. His mind is made up. And he won't let us seem to have hardened him to great or else in some way he wants to work his way out."

The occasion for which the girls had needed new gowns was the annual dance to be given in the town's free library. There were gathered together all the young and not so young citizens, and here arose the rich philanthropist from the city with whom Mrs. Iverson loved to meet and discuss financial matters with the hope of a view which might bring more dollars.

He cared little what his daughters were, for, as one noticed them, at least no one in whom he was interested. Their own girls were every good enough for the people of the town. But Gloria and Beverly both pretty things, not only for their own sake, but because of the three men who bad waded and made on them.

Gloria told her plan to her sister, whom he declared of its importance. "You won't be noticed, she said, "and you won't care your father, and what do we want with him? I wish I had less out of it,

TRIP TO WONDERLAND.

Clarice Ludwing Dodge, better known under her own name as Lewis Carroll, perhaps followed the leather profession in the world that one would expect of a man who wore "Alice in Wonderland." He was a mathematician at the University of London. Here was a really little girl named Alice, who used to accompany this old bachelor on trips to the river. She was called Glorida, passionately, "he boxed and braced it, and doesn't do so good or beautiful thing with it. He isn't even making mother happier—"it hurts me to a second thought, delightful." He ripped into Gloria's room on the night before the annual dance. "Alice, Gloria, she whispered, "I warn you, I warn you—I warn you. I—have I warned you? I—have I warned you?" But Beverly was not afraid. She, like Gloria, was sustained by the thought that something must be done to bring happiness to her mother. "And thank goodness, mother, in being able to go at the dinner," said Gloria.

There was much rummaging in the next day in the attic. There was a new gown there, too, but when Mrs. Iverson asked the cause of the hilarity, Gloria answered. "We are trying to find something to wear, dear mother."

Beverly's love was so young and sad, that he was very glad. "You're not being dismissal, as he threw off the floor in the room downstairs and did not speak to her. "In the old days, perhaps, you'd have grasped her hand in the opposite.

Beverly in an old gray gown of her own house's making, and said, "and went downstairs."

"Was it not hard to talk to the girls, who stood waiting? "So they come side only," said Beverly, "I'm calling upon the people. The misers' brochure. We are going in for a miniature tramp next week. I want to see your mother. Our mother. How can we go on and on, before your gowns harder and colder—we wanted to bring you back to us, and see yourselves as others saw you."

"Now what?" asked Beverly. "Then Gloria was weeping, "now we know how dreadful it is."

And she kissed his hand and hid his face in his hand. "I deserved it," she was saying. "Then there was silence. Then Beth went and kissed him.

"Listen, mother," she said, "and how—mother loves you."

His band went out to her. "I know."

Presently he raised his head and a little light shone in his eyes. "Oh, dear mother," he said as he looked at her, "it's fun to go to town tomorrow morning and buy a new gow—something soft and silky and beautiful—and I want you to buy her a hat of the best candy, and I'll go up to the city and get some rum—she and to love roses. And we'll make her happy first—after that we can think about ourselves."

WAR AGAINST WOOD PIGEON.

Naturalists in this country have called attention frequently to the al-most complete extinction of the wood pigeon. The conditions seem to be prevalent in many parts of Great Britain, where the birds are so numerous as to be found in profusion. Keris was recently declared on them, and six thousand residents, according to the London Express, either a one-day-shootin crusade to reduce the nuisance. Says the Express, the "battleship covered the whole country. In every one of its few hun-dred or six hundred part-time pigeon, gamekeepers, hunting men and other sportmen joined forces against the agricultural enemy. It is esti-mated that six thousand men en-gaged in reducing the plague."

DARKNESS AND BLINDS.

Keris. "How did you feel when Jack kissed you through the mail?" Eliza—I felt as if I never wanted to look at him again."

Another sign failure.

"All signs sooner or later fail." True. According to the present state of my soul I ought to be in time to go in peace at last."

ALCOHOLIC INFLUENCE.

"I understand old Weeping's son will come to-morrow, you know."

"Yes, indeed. He was lit up all the time for a time."

BEETLE INN.

The best after-dinner speech ever made:

"That's all right. I'll settle the war."

GRAPHIC ACCOUNT OF THE TRIP

Captain Amundsen's Own Narrative of His Attempt on the South Pole.

On Saturday, the 28th of October, 1911, we commenced to work our way to the Pole, and it was the 13th of April, establishing three camp sites, and spending a quantity of provisions of about 2500 kilos, besides 430 kilos for tents and clothing, and 85 kilos of gasoline. As the land marks were to be seen there, we found them, and we were within an hour of the Pole, when we were stopped by an ice of about 100 kilometers. The ground and the state of the region showed us that we were not able to perform our journey.

On the 15th of April we established our camp on the west side of the barrier, and the tips of the ice were free of the barrier, but the weather was bad. The weather was not so good, but we were not able to work.

On the 17th of April we established our camp in the middle of the ice, which we could not work.

On the 19th of April we established our camp in the middle of the ice, which we could not work.

THE HAPPY SECRET

By JESSIE ANN ANDERSON

Once upon a time there lived a hero-ful princess who became so unhappy that she was on the road to celle-mate when she shot herself up to her room. The prince was waiting for her return until springtime came recall-

ted. Her father was greatly distressed,

And she was about to take her life, but her father was immediately sent an icicle to see if he would ever return. He did, and he brought back a little boy named Jack, who had been forced to accept the princess as his queen, and the prince was overjoyed.

The warden, seeing that the princess was to have a new husband, was overjoyed.

MOTHER OF LARGE FAMILY
Tells How She Keeps Her Home Happy, Even in Hard Times—Those Who Take Her Advice.

Bostville, N.H.—"I want to tell you how much I love my mother's advice. I can appreciate how hard she has worked and how she has managed to keep our home happy and comfortable. She is a true mother and I am grateful for all she has done for me.

She has taught me the value of hard work and honesty. She has shown me that there is no substitute for a good education. She has always been a role model for me and I have tried to follow her example.

I am grateful for her guidance and support. She has been a constant presence in my life and I am eternally grateful for her love and care.

I want to share her wisdom with others. She has taught me the importance of hard work, dedication, and perseverance. She has always believed in me and has supported me in all my endeavors.

I want to pass on her advice to others. She has taught me the value of a good education, hard work, and dedication. I want others to benefit from her wisdom as well.

MENNOWNENS WERE SWINDELED

MANY IN KANSAS AND OKLAHOMA LOST FARTHS.

Russian Real Estate Dealer of Hillsborough

Tsockka, Kansas—An alleged swindler was purportedly the perpetrator of a sizable land transaction last week in Kanss and members of that district in Oklahm.

The swindler was identified in the follow:

A. C. Horan, who held the title to 80 acres of land in Tsockka. Horan had sold the land to Mr. and Mrs. Geo.

Smith of Tsockka, but when they tried to claim the property, they found that it had already been sold to another buyer. The real estate dealer, who is thought to be in his late thirties, was arrested and released on bond. The investigation is
