Dollars and Ducks.

It is well for young men to know that dollars are like ducks—one follows another—and though they may waddle along slowly and with some effort, they will eventually get there.

We have young men in this town who are just starting out on the road of life, but where that road will lead is for them to say.

They are earning a few dollars now and as time progresses their earning capacity will increase. If the early accumulations are thrown to the birds it is more than likely that in later life the buzzards will roost on the graves of their ambition.

But if their first dollars are carefully laid away in a well sewed pocket, and this lesson of thrift and frugality is fostered and encouraged, then in time the bank will become the depository of their earnings and accumulations and eventual wealth, and the eagle will soar over the heads of successful men.

Those who waste to-day will squander tomorrow, and tomorrow is the agent of the devil and the prime minister of hell.

Keep an eye on the young men of our town, but keep both eyes on those who spend wisely but not foolishly, who are full of life and ginger but never carry it to excess, whose eyes are fixed upon the eagle and not upon the buzzard.

Like the waddling duck, they may advance slowly, but they will get there in time.

State Fair Items.

Twenty-five men are at work on the fair grounds at Albuquerque making it ready for the biggest event ever held in New Mexico, the 35th state fair. The fences are being moved to include four city blocks of grounds to make room for the sixteen big exhibit halls that will be necessary to take care of the displays. The contractor in charge of the job built the halls for the Irrigation Congress and he declares that the plans now in his hands call for a greater exposition than was held at that time. The display advertisement carried in this edition tells of the exhibits to be housed and a glance at the same will show that the fair management is on the job.

The fair premium books are off the press and a copy of the same may be had by addressing the secretary. The book carries $10,000 in premiums, more than has ever been offered at a State Fair in New Mexico before. Two departments have been added and others have been enlarged.

Of particular interest in the premium book is the outline of the official program for each day of the fair. While these programs are subject to change somewhat, the features outlined will be seen every afternoon and evening on the grounds. One cannot read of each day's doings without reaching the conclusion that the amusement and entertainment provided for the fair visitors is more varied and of a higher class than anything of the sort ever seen in the state. The fair management has promised to have something doing every minute, and from the appearance of the program it seems that the promise will be amply redeemed. Some of the very best amusements to be seen and heard do not appear on the program, as they have been contracted for since the book was sent to press.

All street carnival features have been eliminated this year and the entire fair will be on the fair grounds, including shows, free acts, amusements and concessions. The streets of Albuquerque and the buildings will be beautifully decorated and will not be littered and obstructed by cheap shows.

Special trains are to be run to the fair from various sections of the state, Colorado, Arizona and Texas. At the station an information bureau will be established by the fair office to direct visitors to hotels and rooming houses. One fare rates for the round trip will prevail upon all roads for the usual trains and the specials. The fair plans on meeting all large visiting delegations with a brass band and a big reception committee.

The night programs at the fair will be especially attractive. This is an experiment with the fair this year and a large sum of money has been spent for entertaining the night crowds. Thousands of dollars have been invested in the fairworks alone which will be the same as those shown at the largest state fairs in the country. Among the features of these displays are such events as the battle of the Dardanelles and an aerial engagement between zeppelins and aeroplanes.

Bernalillo is Economical.

Bernalillo county, in which the largest city in the state, Albuquerque, is situated, and in which city the New Mexico State Fair will be held permanently, gave $500 to the great State Fair. Most of New Mexico's counties have given this sum and two counties pledged $1,000 each, while Dona Ana county gave her check the day her pledge was made $1,000, by her county commissioners. Bernalillo county is the immediate beneficiary of the State Fair—she gets all the profit on the living expenses of the entire attendance for the week that holds the Fair, and it would appear that she should willingly and easily have doubled the largest amount given by any other county. Truly as State Fair President Putney said here. Albuquerque is sleep, and it will evidently take such a loss as the State Fair's removal to some aspiring and generous city of the state to break up her somnambulist condition.—Rio Grande Republic, Las Cruces.

AS THE EDITOR SEES IT

MISUSING HIS BRAINS.

Everybody has brains, but not everyone uses them to best advantage.

For instance: One day we dropped into a business house that never advertises and noted a rough sign on the window offering a certain article for sale at a reduced price, but with no figures given.

We said nothing, but casually glanced around for the article. It was nowhere to be seen. Others came in and looked around, bought a few things and went out.

That business man has a fair allotment of brains, but he simply fails to apply them properly.

He should have inserted an ad in this paper offering the article in question at a specially reduced price, and should have started the price. That would have started a certain number of people to looking for it.

Then he should have set out one or more of the articles on the counter with a placard reading, "As Advertised, $1.25," or whatever the price may have been. Another one with a placard might have been placed in his store window.

The advertisement in the paper would have conveyed the information of a bargain to the general public. The article prominently displayed with price attached would have made the sales.

Brains are a good thing to have, but they are vastly more effective when used to advantage.

In the beginning there are two roads that lead to wealth—the one by way of the brain, the other through the palms of willing hands. When the one cooperates with the other the two become a team that is irresistible, the two roads are converged into one, and the goal lies straight ahead.

The American dollar is now said to be the standard in the financial markets of the world. Sounds good and reads well, but for the love of Peggy give us an opportunity to use it instead of talking about it. We want a new hat.

We'd rather like to hit it off at that new Fort Sheridan training camp ourselves if we could be captain right from the jump.

Sheep Notes.

Sheep in Yavapai county have been raised by the tax assessor fifty cents per head. This is the only class of property raised this year.

Chas. E. Burton of Jerome Junction, a well known sheepman, states that the average Arizona clip brought $2.50 this year.

The local experiment station has been experimenting with crossing the Tunis on native ewes with an admixture of Hampshire and Shropshire blood. The experiment has now progressed far enough so that the number of sheep at the station will be cut down to a smaller number of the type which it is desired to reproduce, and a number of head of feeding stock are being sold to farmers in the warmer sections of the state. A consignment has just been sent to Yuma, where the farmers will use them to breed up a type of sheep which will withstand the warm weather of the Yuma valley.

New Mexico sheep are bringing the highest price ever known. Practically all of the lamb crop has been contracted for, some exceptional lots bringing as high as $6.75 per hundredweight. It is said that one reason of the high price is because of the demand for pelts, which bring in some cases $2.00 each.

Elgin, Ill., pulled off a big automobile race the other day, but it was so exasperatingly tame they couldn't scare up even a single "kill."

Opening a Nation's Eye.

America, like the newly born kitten, has been sleeping these many years, with eyes closed and the possibilities of the future an impenetrable blank.

But to-day the national eye is beginning to open and the light of reason is thinking in.

The president, a sincere advocate of peace, reluctantly admits that the overturning of the old world by the sword and the shell, and the lust for blood and conquest which permeates nearly every nation of the earth, has placed the United States in the most precarious position of its history.

The president wants the American people to prepare to defend themselves against the invader when he appears. That is, Mr. Wilson would have a large number of citizens throughout the country enlisted in an army reserve, fully equipped, ready to take the field following the forces of the regular army and the national guard.

We all love peace and want peace, but we fear that in the present temper of the world the only positive guarantee of peace is to possess the means of thrashing the other fellow.

The president's ideas along this line are good.

Let us have a great army of citizen-reserves, men who are willing to acquire some knowledge of the duties of a soldier before they are called upon to perform those duties in the face of an enemy.

The safety of our country to-day depends upon the strong arm of its citizenship—upon you, and upon us, and others of our class.

The national eye has been opened, with the result that we will have safety without the curse of aggressive militarism.

Ancient Human Skull.

Of interest with the Tertiary gold-bearing river gravels of California is the story of the Calaveras skull. For a time the skull attracted much attention not only from the people in California, but from scientific men the world over. It was reported to have been found in 1866, near the town of Angels, Calaveras County, at a depth of 130 feet, in Tertiary gravels underlying Tertiary lava. The finding of a human skull embedded in such deposits was for a time believed to indicate that man had been in existence in North America longer than had been supposed. Strange to say, the skull is of a higher type than skulls which, although known to antedate historic times, are known also to be much younger than the Tertiary. Although Prof. J. D. Whitney, then State geologist, accepted the skull as a bit of genuine scientific evidence, it is generally believed by students of the antiquity of man that the Calaveras skull, while undoubtedly old, probably did not come from the auriferous gravels at all. (Overland Guidebook, Bulletin 612, U. S. Geological Survey.)

A Nation at Peace.

What a glorious thing it is to be at peace with all the world!

How refreshing the thought that there are none who seek our gore!

And yet—We are on the brink of a war with Germany.

We face the necessity of intervention in Mexico.

Our marines are forcibly occupying Haiti.

Japan has its eye on the Philippines.

An hell is too close for comfort.

Battling Nelson at Juarez.

Battling Nelson, the former lightweight champion of the world, has been signed up to fight Bobby Vaughn, the champion of Texas, in a twenty round bout at the Juarez arena on Monday, September 6. Nelson is trying again to come back, and in the Texas champ he is going against a hard scrapper who will make the Durable Dane show whether he has anything left or not. It is probable that a crowd will go from Daming to witness the mill.

Livestock Should Pay.

Livestock raising in connection with general farming is safer practice than growing crops exclusively. The more animals the farm supports the better the opportunities for saving fertility and growing larger crops, the less the likelihood as crop failure and the wider will be the margin for profitable farming—Farmand Ranch.

A Step Forward.

We should have a closer spirit of cooperation between the farmers of this community, and then between the farmers and the townsmen, and we know of no better way to accomplish this desired result than to organize a kind of "Get Together Club," the membership to be free and composed of all who may wish to affiliate.

Once formed, such a club could hold meetings about once each month at which subjects affecting the welfare of the community could be discussed, newly tried methods of production reported upon, and plans laid for the general improvement of local conditions.

Then there could be a general fraternizing between the farmer and the townsman, with the result that a closer understanding and appreciation of the one for the other would be developed, and all could unite in a determined movement for the advancement of the social, commercial and financial interests of all of the people.

There is no question but such an organization would be of inestimable value to the community when properly and energetically conducted.

The question is, though have we three or four leading and aggressive citizens from farm and town who will take the initiative in the launching of such a movement?

If they will come forward we will place the columns of this paper at their disposal and write our own name as Number One on the membership list.

All that is needed is to issue a call for a general meeting, and the people will be there in large numbers.

But we will never get anywhere unless we first make the start.

Step forward, gentlemen, step forward!

A Divine Covenant.

God Almighty gave Eve to Adam with the pledge that she would be his helpmeet and with this order of companionship, civilization has towered to its greatest height. In this relationship, God has blessed woman and man has honored her and after four thousand years of progress, she now proposes to provoke God to decoy man by asking for suffrage, thereby by amending an agreement to which she was not a party.

Woman, remember that the Israelite scorned a divine covenant, and as a result wandered forty years in the wilderness without God. Likewise man should remember that it is a dangerous thing to debase woman by law. Rome tried lowering woman's standard and an outraged civilization tore the clothes off the backs of the human race and turned them out to roam in the world naked and ashamed.

"MEMENTO MORI."

The early Christian philosophers frequently used this Latin phrase "Memento Mori," meaning by that to warn sinners of the approach of death. The world moves on; Latin becomes a dead language; ragtime dominates our amusements and physicians of the body tell us to forget the admonitions of former spiritual advisers and "Remember Life." "What is death, they ask, except the end of things in which everyone else is more or less concerned than ourselves, even though we are the principal actor therein? Dr. Woods Hutchison, president-elect of the American Academy of Medicine, says that over-eating is the chief trouble of the American people. He warns us to remember the correct way to live is to be temperate in all things, especially in eating, driving home the fact that "it doesn't matter in the least how fast we dig our own graves, so long as we do not fall into them previously." All of which brings us to the fact, physicians are continually showing, that the American people die before their time because they are intemperate—not in drinking, as the prohibitionists would have us believe, but in overworking and overeating and overliving. The sight of a drunken man, even in the great cities, is comparatively rare. Few saloons, nowadays, will sell a drunken man. But, go into a restaurant and watch people overeat. Note the fat paunches, the hanging jowls, the dead eyes, the gouty walks of those you pass, and you will not be astonished at the physicians statements. Temperance is moderate indulgence. It is just as bad morally as physically to overeat as it is to over-drink. Do not overlook that greater evil—overeating. Remember life!

HIS BIGGEST INTEREST.

A man in another state was once asked which of his several investments paid him the highest rate of interest, and he promptly replied that it was the two dollars he paid on his subscription to the local paper. "One day I wanted to buy a cow," he said, "and was intending to make a trip of about fifteen miles to get one that I knew was for sale at a certain price. But just before starting I happened to pick up the local paper and noticed that a nearby neighbor was offering one of the same breed at a dollar less than the other one. He really sold it to me for $4 less. I saved a long thirty mile drive and $4 in cash because I had paid two dollars for the paper.

"That was just one instance, but as a matter of fact I saved both time and money in fifteen or twenty different ways during the year, and all through reading the ads in a paper that had cost me but two dollars a year. I consider those two dollars the best investment I ever made, and I am investing as regularly as the year rolls round, and always with the most satisfactory results."

to her home she hurried back, biting her lips and sobbing, to fling herself upon her bed and indulge in the bitterness of her self-immolation.

She felt the universal suspicion, she felt that she was an object of scorn and pity. On the last evening of these automobile rides, when Daisy had at length recovered, Wright returned to his home thankful that matters at the office would thenceforward assume their old routine. The following day his wife's father would deposit the sum to his credit, and all would be plain sailing.

He came home to find the flat empty and his wife's belongings gone.

CHAPTER III.

Miss Susan Minturn smacked her thin lips as she read the item in the evening newspaper.

"Wife of Broker Leaves Him on Eve of Bankruptcy," she read. "Mrs. William Wright returns to her father's house. She will apply for divorce from her husband, naming his stenographer, Daisy Dean, as co-respondent."

She folded the paper and laid it down. "That's one for Robert," she said. "And I, unsuspecting that I am, never even suspected that anything was really wrong."

She swung round as the door opened. Her brother Robert stood on the threshold, livid and trembling. In his hand he held a copy of the same newspaper.

"Do you know what this infamous sheet is printing?" he demanded.

Miss Susan laid her hand on his shoulder. "Yes, Robert, my poor boy," she answered. "I am so sorry. We never suspected, even though we used our eyes, how bad it really was. It is a scandal to the whole neighborhood. She must be forced to leave Dotsboro."

Robert glared at his sister. "She will come to this house to be my wife!" he shouted, slamming down his fist on the table. "Susan, do you suppose I believe those infamous stories? Do you think I am going to abandon her in her trouble?"

"Robert, you are mad! To bring that girl to our house—"

"If she'll have me," said Robert, humbly.

"Oh, she'll have you fast enough!" his sister sneered. "Only if you bring her here I walk out. Thank heaven I am a respectable woman. There is a limit, and I draw it here, Robert. Why, do you want people to say that you married a girl Austin Clark wouldn't look at after he found her out?"

Her brother, unable to trust himself to answer her, stamped out of the room.

In her own home Daisy Dean sat in a chair and stared, dry-eyed, at the newspaper.

She had found her employer's office closed that morning when she arrived, and the office boy waiting outside. Mr. Wright was habitually so punctual that Daisy had telephoned to his apartment. She learned that it was closed. Mr. Wright had come home the evening before and gone out again. That was all that was known. Mrs. Wright was away on a visit.

Again that morning Daisy went down to the office, to find the door still locked. The office boy had grinned sheepishly at her this time. He told her everything except the one salient fact, and that he would not have blurted out for all the raises that his imagination had ever devised.

"The boss has had a row with Mrs. Wright, Miss Dean," he said. "She's left him, and he's gone after her to bring her back. No, I don't know what trouble's about. The colored man's kid in the apartment house told me about it."

What had happened was this: Mr. Wright had gone, rather frantically, to his father-in-law's house, thinking that his wife might be there. Even then he did not surmise the nature of the trouble. Yes, she was there, but she refused to see him. Instead, the old man had come downstairs, and a stormy interview followed.

Mrs. Wright's father was a matter-of-fact man. He did not feel so much the moral obliquity of his son-in-law's behavior as the scandal that he had brought about. He had heard the rumors that were flying over the town and had disbelieved them; but his daughter's hysterical return the same afternoon had convinced him as to their truth. He wasn't going to finance a son-in-law who made such a fool of himself, especially since his daughter announced that she would never return to him.

"You've played the fool, William, and you'll have to get out of your trouble as best you can," he said. "If my daughter goes back to you again I'll see if I'm willing to help you. As matters stand, she says she won't, and that's enough for me."

"But I've made all my arrangements in view of that loan," cried Wright. "Don't you see, sir, that my wife's hysterical and wrought up about nothing, so far as I can see? Why the whole charge is preposterous."

"I don't care what it is," shouted the old man. "I've done with you, and I've better uses for my money than to lend it to a fool like you."

And suddenly Wright's anger cooled. The utter malignancy of the whole thing, which had come home to Daisy, struck home to him also. He looked at the old man in a dazed way.

"You'll be sorry," he said. "But it'll be too late tomorrow."

And he walked slowly out of the house and back to his apartment.

At a late hour the following afternoon he pulled himself together and went down to his office. Seated alone there, he went through the hopeless

"How is your foot this morning, Miss Dean?" he asked.

"I think it's a little better, Mr. Wright. The doctor won't let me come to the office this week, though."

"Of course not," answered Wright quickly. "But, Miss Dean, if I were to call for you in my car and take you home, don't you think you could help me out with a few letters? You know I simply can't let anybody else know about that matter."

"Why, certainly, Mr. Wright. I am sure I can come, if you really need me."

"I'll be round in ten minutes," answered Wright, and telephoned for the chauffeur.

Half an hour later Wright was congratulating himself upon his move. He could not possibly have confided to the public stenographer that he was heavily tied up. His wife's father, a cautious man of business, had gone through his books and promised him a substantial loan. This necessitated a good deal of correspondence, and only Daisy could help him. Before she left that evening it had been arranged that he should call for her every morning during the ensuing week and take her home at night.

He helped her from the elevator into the street, where his car stood waiting, and drove her to Dotsboro. Cadman Green, posted at his club window, looked down upon the sight.

"The poor chap's losing his head," he muttered. "Woman, too, I guess. If I was one of Wright's clients who come to him to invest their money for them, I'd draw it all out before the inevitable—yes, sir, the inevitable elopement."

"It's a disgrace to the neighborhood Robert," she said to her brother angrily. "And it's going to be stopped."

"I can't stop it," Robert muttered. "I know you can't," said his sister mimicking him. "But I've done it. I wrote an unsigned letter to Austin Clark yesterday."

Daisy had hardly got home that evening when Austin Clark appeared before her, hot, indignant and declamatory.

"I want to know who the fellow is!" he thundered, after he had launched forth in bitter accusation against her. "See here, Daisy," he continued, a little more mildly as he realized that he had aroused her spirit, "this thing isn't right. You and I are engaged and you are seen driving out every morning with this fellow, and he comes home with you at night. I know who he is, too. I can put things together. He's Wright."

He looked at her triumphantly, as if he had made a wonderful discovery.

"If you had asked me in the beginning I should have told you that it was Mr. Wright," said Daisy quietly.

"But that makes it worse," snarled Austin. "See here, what business have you to let your boss drive you around town and make a talk of you in this way? It reflects on me, too. You ought to have seen the letter I got this morning."

"From whom?"

"I don't know from whom. It isn't signed. People don't sign that sort of letter."

"And you dare—you dare to make such accusations against me on the strength of an anonymous letter, Austin?"

She would not dream now of telling him the simple explanation. The thought that he should have listened to invidious gossip instead of trying to protect her was maddening. She drew his ring off her finger.

"I think we made a mistake, Austin," she said.

He swung upon his heel. "I think so, too," he answered with bitter emphasis, and slammed the door behind him.

Daisy, with compressed lips, sat brooding over his treatment of her. She was stunned by the malignity that seemed suddenly to envelop her. But she would fight it down. Her anxiety over her employer's affairs, her desire to be loyal to him forbade any other course. And never should he know what she had suffered because of him.

She let him drive her to and from the office for days, even after she was able to walk. That was youth's unwise reply to envy. And daily Cadman Green, seated at the club window, watched and waited for the elopement. Gradually, too, the news permeated the gossip little town. Wright alone remained serenely in ignorance of what was being said. All he knew was that his wife's headaches were more frequent than usual, and his business worries overshadowed that fact.

In two or three days her father had promised to place a substantial amount to his credit. That would enable him to meet his obligations. Daisy knew it and rejoiced with him. Miss Susan, watching like a cat for her return each night, had to admit that the girl did not look like the victim of a designing scoundrel.

"Maybe I wronged her in my thoughts, Robert," she said. "But there's evil in her—and you'll remember it."

"I'm sorry you think that, Susan," answered Robert, "because, now that she has broken with Clark, I mean to ask her again to be my wife."

"Heaven help you if ever you marry her," Miss Susan answered.

It was strange, but not even the lynx-eyed watcher at the window detected the frequency with which a certain woman was to be seen passing and repassing along the street, morning and evening. For five days Mrs. Wright haunted the neighborhood, mad with jealousy, and each time she saw her husband driving Miss Dean
