Approximately 3,000 university students marched in downtown Buenos Aires on the afternoon of Nov. 14, to protest police actions against a morning demonstration which took place outside the Ciudad Universitaria. The earlier protest, organized in protest of the federal government's failure to increase the education budget, was broken up by federal police. Students from several faculties of the University of Buenos Aires voiced slogans criticizing university rector Oscar Shuberoff, the federal police and President Raul Alfonsin. The demonstrators were accompanied by vice president of the Peronist Renovador faction, Oscar Fappiano. A document signed by the leaders of several student groups, including the Young Radicals, Peronist Youth, Intransigente Youth, and the Young Communist Federation, among others, contained criticisms of the government's economic stabilization plan, and recent remarks by President Alfonsin about student demands considered offensive.
