From August 3 to 31 the University of New Mexico will conduct its annual Field Sessions in Anthropology in the Jemez and Chaco Canyons, New Mexico. Permanent buildings have been completed for the General Session encampment at Battleship Rock, near Jemez Springs, where practical field experience in archaeology and geology is offered undergraduate students. The Advanced Session will be held at the Chaco Canyon Research Station; this is devoted primarily to graduate instruction and fieldwork in archaeology, anthropogeography, biology, paleontology and ethnography.
