Hillen hangs, night of June 24, 1915.

Cañon City, Colo., June 25.—Harry Hillen, Denver "boy bandit," slayer of Thomas Chase in October, 1913, last night took the step on the gallows drop that ended his life. A career of lawlessness, marked by half a hundred crimes, was closed when he walked upon the little square platform in the state penitentiary death chamber; a moment later he was dangling from the end of a rope. He was pronounced dead at 10:30 o'clock.

Blamed Dead on Companions.
Until the final minute of his life Hillen maintained his innocence of the murder of Chase in Denver a year and a half ago. He blamed that deed upon two companions, youths who had helped him in other crimes to which he confessed to the Denver police.

The last hour of Hillen's life began with the assembling of witnesses and officials in the penitentiary. The slayer had made his spiritual peace earlier in the day, with ministrations by Prison Chaplain Blake and the Rev. C. P. Halsey, a Baptist pastor. His sister, Miss Irene Hillen, had spent most of the day with him, bringing confirmation of the news that the governor had refused to interfere in the case.

His spiritual adviser, Chaplain Blake and the Rev. Mr. Halsey, stepped forward, and in tones audible only to the man between them, commended his soul to his Maker. His rites performed, they retired.

Then the black cap—and from the group came shudders. Heads were averted and remained so until the end. In a twinkling the guards had hobbled the prisoner, leaving him just enough foot freedom to step backward once more. His arms and wrists were fastened to his sides and the guards adjusted the knot carefully and then they stepped back. A low word of command was given from some one in uniform and, obedient though he knew it was fatal, Hillen took the step. He felt the little platform sink slowly and he braced himself rigidly.

The platform's sinking released an 800-pound weight in a side room. The weight fell, carrying with it the other end of the rope which was stretched over a series of pulleys.

The prison physician, Dr. Hart Goodloe, stepped forward and examined the pulse. Shortly he pronounced Harry Hillen dead.

Message by Sister.

When Hillen received a message from his sister in Denver saying she had been unable to obtain the governor's clemency, he seemed unmoved by the tidings.
"I hardly expected anything else," he said, with the same air of calm that had characterized him through his battle against the law.
Secrecy as great as that preceding the hanging was maintained afterward by those who had seen him. Witnesses of the execution by saying they were

THE PLAN ADOPTED.

Let the sons of the patriots glow in the pride That is theirs by the right of succession—
That to them by the right of succession—
I sing of the glories born far and wide Who of love for the flag make confession.
We've seen them in action with Mauser and Krug, And surely they saw in the fluttering flag: Stars of hope!—The met only a banner, But shield! Stripes of merit!—A Gordon from many a field!
Old Glory! Old Glory! In song and in story Forever you're flying before us!— The red of our blood! The white of our good! And the blue of the sky that smiles o'er us!
We are brothers and sisters by rule from above, We're all of us lovers of freedom, Our daddies never fought for the flag that you love— But their sons are right here when you sing "em!" And we'll get our fault (Mr. Dooley I quote) That we're sons of "the fellows who missed the first boat." So, brothers and sisters, this message I bring: Our hearts are attuned when we help you to sing:
Old Glory! Old Glory! In song and in story Forever you're flying before us!— The red of our blood! The white of our good! And the blue of the sky that smiles o'er us!

The SANE FOURTH AT DASHVILLE by MASON RAY

"A sane Fourth's the thing," observed the portly mayor. He glanced across the table at his wife, then let his wandering gaze come to rest on his pretty daughter June. "There's no sense in burning powder and making a racket to celebrate our nation's independence; I say, let's have a sane Fourth."

"Of course we'll have a picnic," planned the mayor's better half. "The tables can be set under the trees in that grove by the station. We'll get some carpenter to contribute work on them and a speaker's stand."

"The sooner I talk it over with the business men the better," decided Mayor Munshaw. "I'll talk 'em into prohibiting the sale of fireworks. We'll keep 'em from evening and have 'em set off under the auspices of the village. Our councilmen will officiate."

"Dinner ready," trumpeted Dan Hughes of the megaphone voice. "Everybody set up! And those what can't set 'I have to stand!"

Instantly the shifting crowd coalesced like magic about the long table with Reverend Fanning in a central position to say grace, and the mayor stationed at his right. A profound silence settled over the multitude during this invocation, then a buzz of laughter burst forth with redoubled gayety.

"Superintendent Eldridge will now read the corner stone of American liberty," announced Mayor Munshaw at the close of the song. He beamed over the perspiring throng. The celebration was a great success. Not a firecracker in the hands of little boys had disturbed the peace. His patriotic archal beard hung straight down over his white vest. He was a dignified and imposing figure. As if actuated by an automatic device the superintendent of Dashville high school rose to his feet as the mayor sat heavily down. His carefully-thought-out preliminary remarks lengthened almost to a lecture while his patient audience stared at him stonily. Above dotted a sky of brass that loaned a sulphurous hue to the furnace-hot atmosphere. Fans slowly waved. Parboiled countenances were turned toward the speaker. He began, at last, to read:

"When, in the course of human events," he intoned sonorously, "it becomes necessary for one people

Sp-t! Bang! Bang! Sp-t! sounded the staccato notes of something that drowned the reader's full tones. Bang! Bang! Bang! Sp-t! Puff! rolled out accumulated noise—a noise that smote the heavens with projectiles. Projectiles darted like mad in every direction while the choir fled wildly from the place and the councilmen grappled with discharging fireworks.

"Someone must throw a match!" "That's the work of a cigarette brand!" "Bet-chu some boy did that a purpose," were some of the shouted comments. Meanwhile the frantic efforts of the town council released dormant rockets, pin-wheels, set pieces. The startled audience scattered right and left in confusion. Never since 1776 had the Declaration of Independence been so fittingly introduced and fervently presented. Order was finally restored. The speaker resumed his remarks.

confronted the reader and again Superintendent Eldridge intoned the rounded phrases of our charter of liberty.

"a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them."

"Look!" shouted Dan Hughes of the megaphone voice. "The depot's on fire!"

"The oil tanks! The oil tanks!" shouted a dozen voices. "The tank cars 'll explode!"

They did. At least flames shot upward and seemed to greedily lick the sky. With a dull, prolonged roar ascending fire tongues the heavens while every man, woman and child of Dashville deserted the picnic grounds and raced for the spot. Even Mayor Munshaw managed to join a hastily formed fire brigade and assist in passing water to men on the depot roof. In the thick of fire and smoke he worked valiantly. And when he emerged from the ruins before the final collapse no one would have recognized the mayor of Dashville. His luxuriant beard was no more. Fire had ruthlessly mowed it to his chin. His patriarchal dignity had departed.

The bucket brigade stood back and viewed the roaring conflagration. "Looks like all hell had broke loose," commented one of the village council.

"Musta been a blazing rocket stick," declared another.

"Or a cigar stub," guessed a third. Straggling at the rear of the last babe-laden woman were June and Tom Norris. June was frightened. She wanted someone to remain at her side and look closely after her welfare. So Tom accepted the office. They turned their backs on the fire and slowly sauntered toward the depopulated town. Never had Tom seen June more charming. Her gown was like a bit of mid-summer sky trimmed with fleecy cloud. Her blue eyes were luminous with love. Her cherry red lips were tempting sweet but when he would have begged a kiss timidly intervened. Instead he looked at the sky and saw, instead of ruby lips, a funnel-shaped cloud of copper hue that approached at meteor speed.

"A cyclone!" he shouted and caught June up in his arms. There was no time for delay. Swift danger swept away his temerity. He forgot that he was but a struggling bank clerk and June the daughter of Dashville's wealthy mayor. Like any knight of medieval times he was rescuing his lady fair from impending death, death from a rampant cyclone. And, unlike the valorous knight of old who wielded spear in defense of his love, he was forced to the ignominious device of seeking a cellar. It would be the only spot respected by the destroyer. With a vicious lunge he burst in the door of the nearest house that offered basement protection and leaped down the cellar stairs. The next moment there came a grinding roar as if the very universe was being uprooted and flung to the raging winds. Terrified, June clung to her lover while he freely uttered the long delayed words of endearment. In that supreme moment their meeting lips sealed their troth. Then they became aware that the destroying agent had passed, leaving desolation in its wake. The house above them was gone, revealing a lurid sky. About them were strewn the ruins of a razed village. Dashville was mainly kindling wood and scattered stone.

Dust-begrimed, disheveled but absurdly happy the two climbed from the cellar and sought the mayor. The station where Tom Norris owned property was unscathed. It was fortunate at one side of the path of the ruin that included the Munshaw residence and over half the town. He would offer refuge to his future father-in-law and at the same propitious moment ask his daughter's hand in marriage. They met dismayed residents searching among the debris for shattered homes yet thankful for their lives. The Fourth of July picnic had saved them. But for the gathering at the grove many would have been caught in crashing buildings and perished. Finally the mayor, or what was left of him, loomed in view.

"Papa," cried June when she recognized the wreck of her once spic-and-span parent, "Tom saved me! Carried me into a cyclone cellar! But whatever happened to you?"

"Nothing's happened to me," testily declared the foremost citizen of Dash-ville. "Nothing on earth's happened to me but a condemned sane Fourth that's gone clean looney!"

"Why, papa," said June with a happy glance at her lover, "I think this has been a perfectly beautiful Fourth of July!"

Time to Reflect.
Reflect with reverence, with swelling pride and utter thankfulness upon the great deeds that have made us a nation of strength and courage, upon the heroes whose lives have given additional lustre to the banner of our pride and upon the duty to mankind which it lays upon us to be so imperative

Commercial Club Meets Baptist Revival Closed

P. S. Eaves president of the Commercial Club, called a meeting Wednesday at 2 o'clock p. m. which was well attended by the enthusiastic business men of Lovington. The object of the meeting as stated by the chair, was to take some definite action in regard to the annual picnic. After considerable deliberation the club decided to accede to the proposition made by J. S. Eaves at a former meeting. That if the club would subscribe a certain amount or cash, payable to J. S. Eaves, he would assume the responsibility of the picnic. Consisting of one day barbecue, and two days more entertainment. Then a committee was appointed to solicit funds.

We are much pleased with the action of the club, and feel sure it means much to the town of Lovington. We are also glad that it is possible to say are this goes to press most of the funds will have been subscribed.

Lean Live Stock Bad Advertisement

(A. M. Hove)

Every thin steer, every scrawny sheep, every feeble hog that is shipped out of Eddy County is noticed that Eddy County does not grow much feed. The most brilliant folder, descriptive of the country and its products, cuts a very figure beside the living advertisement in the way of thin live stock, shipped by the thousands from Eddy County to pasture and corn in supposedly more blessed regions.

In circulating around the Kansas City stock yards today, I find few that take Eddy County seriously except as a breeder of stock that may be brought to the Panhandle for a year on grass and later six months on corn in Kansas. At the end of this period some of the beef and mutton comes back to the Pecos Valley on ice and it costs a fancy price.

Whenever it can be demonstrated to the live stock interests at the big markets that Eddy County is more than mere breeders of thin cattle, money will become available for every man who has feed and industry that he may stock or his feed lot. When the time comes new settlers will come a plenty and occupy the idle lands that have been hauled in practically by main force.

Fat steers, lambs, and hogs look mighty interesting to most people and the country that produces them gets the attention of the right sort of homeseekers. Plant some more kaffir corn and sorghum and be ready to feed something in the fall.

The tabernacle is the daily talk. We are so anxious to see it completed. It means so much to our city. For some unknown reason the number in transit has been delayed. However some of our sturdy men are doing such work as is possible for it arrives, and all eyes are turned toward the Public Square that is where it is to be erected.

Last Sunday afternoon while the mass was raging, the house of Mr. Tum who lives northwest of town is struck by lightning. It is thought that the bolt was conducted into the house by the stove pipe. No serious damage sustained. However the family was slightly shocked.

John and Miss Price returned from their trip to their Uncle's home in Shafter.

Last Sunday evening marked the closing of a great revival in Lovington. It was well attended, and the interest was good from the first service. There was some substantial work done. The church was stirred, revived and rebaptized with power, resulting in the salvation of souls.

There were fourteen conversion which is a goodly number in point of the worth of souls. There were sixteen additions to the church, eight by baptism and eight by letter or on statement.

The pastor, J. H. Clouse did the preaching which was very effective. His preaching was of a deep spiritual nature, laden with the message of love, which lifted his hearers heavenward, and at the same time burned the truth home to the heart in a way that moved them toward the right.

The results of the meeting only eternity can tell. We wish for Lovington many more meetings like this one.
