OFFICIAL COUNTY PAPER --- DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 19

CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, MARCH 29, 1918.

The Public Health

A new booklet, just off the press, of which we are in receipt of a copy, describes in detail the plans and purposes of the New Mexico Public Health Association.

This document is an unusually interesting one as it not only sets forth the chief public health needs of this state but suggests a solution.

New Mexico has been notoriously deficient in the matter of public health work. We have no health statistics and no way to collect them. We are ignorant as to our death rate or our birth rate. We have no central organization for carrying out the directions of the Surgeon General's Department at Washington in connection with the health crusades inaugurated by the Federal Government to combat certain conditions that are menacing the fighting effectiveness of our army as well as the health of our civil population.

The booklet states that the program of work of the Association will, for the present, focus upon securing for New Mexico an adequately financed and efficiently managed State Department of Health as a branch of the State Government at Santa Fe.

We have long needed an association of this kind and the need has increased tremendously since the declaration of war.

With hundreds of the young men of the draft age in New Mexico being rejected on account of tuberculosis, it becomes evident that disease will take a heavy toll upon the thousands who have already been accepted into the National Army and who will be exposed to the same privations and infections as the soldiers of France and the other countries at war. Five hundred thousand French soldiers have already been disabled as a result of tuberculosis.

Many of the prominent men and women of the state are on the roster of officers and directors of the association. Lack of space makes it impossible to enumerate all of them but we note the names of Governor W. E. Lindsey, Secretary of State Antonio Lucero, Superintendent of Public Instruction J. H. Wagner, Hon. Nathan Jaffa, Mrs. R. F. Asplund, Mrs. Lansing Bloom, Hon. H. O. Bursum, President A. D. Crile, W. A. Hawkins, Bishop F. B. Howden, Mrs. Louis H. D. Murray, Archbishop Pitaval, and Charles A. Spiess, as well as several members of the Surgeon General's staff, including Colonel G. E. Bushnell and Lieutenant-Colonel E. H. Bruns.

You can identify yourself with this movement by paying the small membership fee of $1.00 per year. A booklet containing the association's constitution and by-laws and much information concerning public health conditions in New Mexico may be had upon application to the association, whose headquarters are in the Commerce Building, Albuquerque.

Road Matters

Carrizozo has been full of people from various parts of the county since last night, the occasion being a road discussion in which all are interested. Charles Springer, chairman of the state highway commission, Max Kempnich, member, Jas. A. French, engineer, and Engineer Long of the Forest service reached here from Santa Fe in the afternoon. A mass meeting was held at the court house last night at which all members of the board of county commissioners and a large number of citizens from the county were present.

A discussion ensued, lasting until a late hour, over the relative merits of the Ruidoso road, and when the meeting adjourned no conclusion has been reached. However, another meeting was held this morning at which a still larger representation of the county was present, and it seemed that a compromise was about to be reached when the meeting took a recess at noon. This afternoon agreements between the state and county boards are to be signed and the exact situation will be known when these agreements are given to the press, which cannot very well be the case until next week.

Free Delivery

We are publishing an article this week, communicated to the News, referring to a matter of much moment to our people. It relates to the matter of delivery of goods, and at the risk of incurring the displeasure of dealers we commend it to their attention. At a period when everybody is urged to save it appears that the present system is a waste—a waste that is avoidable. Of course, it is convenient to have everything delivered, from a package of pins to a sack of potatoes, but it is well to remember that we should be willing to submit to some inconveniences, especially when it means a saving to the consumer and absolutely no loss to the dealer. People will purchase goods just the same, for they must have them, even though the delivery system is changed or discontinued.

The Junior Red Cross Auxiliary has completed its organization and hopes to prove itself a useful adjunct to the Carrizozo Red Cross Chapter.

As the fund so generously contributed Sunday evening at the patriotic services held at the Methodist church was not sufficient to comply with the regulations of School Auxiliary organization, Mr. Dingwall has kindly set aside Friday April 5 as Junior Red Cross evening, at the Crystal Theatre, the proceeds of which will be contributed to that organization.

A good show is promised, announcement of which will be made in the papers next week.

Everybody come and help to swell the Junior Red Cross fund.

Fort Stanton Minstrel

The Red Cross benefit at Fort Stanton April 6, will be at the hour named in advertisements last week, viz: 8:00 o'clock p. m. Inasmuch, however, as time will be set forward one hour on the 1st some confusion may arise. Therefore, it will be 8:00 p. m. old time, 9:00 p. m. new time.

Mrs. Slacker for the Junior Red Cross next Friday at the Crystal Theatre.

Mrs. Slacker, a timely, patriotic and artistic Pathe production will be shown at the Crystal Theatre for the benefit of the Junior Red Cross next Friday April 5th.

This photo play features the dainty little star, Gladys Hulette, who is such a favorite of the little folks of our town.

Mrs. Slacker is a splendid picture of the day and hour, growing more timely as the next draft draws nearer, and is one of the really great productions of the day.

By special arrangement with the Pathe Exchange we are able to run this picture ahead of the larger cities, Mrs. Slacker being released for use on the last day of this month and will be used here on April 5th.

Watch for the children next week, they will be looking for you with tickets for sale.

Under Two Flags

Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock Rev. R. H. Lewelling, the Methodist pastor, preached a ringing patriotic sermon to a good congregation. At night a record-breaking crowd filled the church to overflowing, the special attraction being the presentation of a United States flag to the church. The Exchange Bank, The First National Bank and The Lincoln State Bank being the donors. A service flag was also presented, containing 44 stars, representing the number of boys in Army and Navy from Carrizozo. The church provided the material for the flag and Mrs. S. L. Squier made the flag. Old Glory, 6x12 hangs on the rear wall and the service flag hangs just under it.

T. W. Conway, city superintendent of schools, made the presentation address and the pastor responded. E. M. Brickley delivered a patriotic address, well suited to the occasion. The ceremonies were quite impressive, uplifting and inspiring, and highly enjoyed and applauded by all present.

Fort Stanton sent 8 bath-rugs; Capitan, 10 bath-rugs; Ancho, 2 pajamas; Glencoe, 9 bed shirts and 10 suits of pajamas; Lincoln, 10 bed shirts; Corona, 10 suits of pajamas; Carrizozo, 12 bath-rugs and 25 suits of pajamas.

Another box is ready for shipment and those who have bed suits out, please bring in as soon as possible.

Old Citizen Dies

Henry Emerson died Monday night and was buried the day following. Mr. Emerson had been in declining health for some time past. He had visited the Hot Springs in hopes of securing relief but returned in still worse condition. The deceased was a man of mature years and had lived in Lincoln county for more than a quarter of a century. He leaves a wife and a number of children and a large number of relatives many of whom reside in this county. A staunch old citizen has gone to his reward leaving not only family and other relatives but a large number of friends to mourn his departure.

Land Sales

The state offered and sold here Tuesday 20 to 30,000 acres of land. A number of purchasers were on hand and in most cases no contests developed and the sales were made at the minimum price. A contest, however, on a tract near Capitan caused G. A. Tittsworth to pay $6.55 per acre, while a still more spirited contest on land near Carrizozo made T. A. Spencer pay $10.02 per acre.

Pay Your Income Tax

Tax slackers will be prosecuted as vigorously and relentlessly under the War Revenue Act as draft slackers were prosecuted under the selective service act. The aid of all good citizens is invoked in bringing to justice the man who deliberately seeks to evade his just share of the war burden.

This was the statement today of Commissioner of Internal Revenue Daniel C. Roper. With only eight days left in which to file income tax returns he has practically completed the organization of a huge dragnet for bringing into camp all persons who fail to file their returns by April 1. Revenue officers in every section of the country are checking up returns with a view to beginning prosecutions against tax dodgers. The word has gone forth that such offenders need expect no leniency.

"Through its educational campaign the Bureau of Internal Revenue has endeavored to cover the field so thoroughly that ignorance of the law cannot be consistently offered as an excuse," said Commissioner Roper today. "The press, the four minutes men, the State and County Councils of National Defense, the field force of the Department of Agriculture and other governments, banks, post-offices and hundreds of volunteer agencies have cooperated in bringing home to the taxpayer his duty."

"The man who failed to register under the selective service act was regarded by the War Department as a slacker and prosecuted as such. The man who fails to file his income tax will be regarded as a 'money slacker,' and when discovered, as he will be, will be made to suffer full penalties of the law."

"To the credit of the Nation it may be said that I have gratifying and conclusive evidence that these income taxes will be paid by the great majority of the American people cheerfully and willingly. But the duty of the honest man does not end with the payment of his own tax. I call upon him to aid in bringing into camp the tax dodger. A man so niggardly as to seek to evade what his representatives in Congress have declared to be his just share of a tax imposed for the support of our arms is deserving of no consideration and will receive none."

"Congress has distributed this tax justly and equitably. The rate is fixed so that the rich man and the men of moderate means

Draft Registrants Training for Signal Corps at State College

Recent announcements of the second draft caused many of New Mexico ambitious young men subject to it to send in applications for enrollment in the free Radio and Buzzer Operator's course being given at the New Mexico State College. Not only those subject to immediate call but many others are taking advantage of this excellent opportunity to themselves in the service above the rank of private and make the way to rapid promotion easy.

With the return of fine weather the new Field Buzzer sets recently received are being put into service. This gives the men practical experience with the regular equipment, sending and receiving at temporary stations about the College campus. In addition to this a new class has been organized for the study of telegraph circuits and equipment in which instrument adjustment, the location of trouble, and its repair is taken up. This latter course seems to be very popular with the men as many of them realize that rapid promotion comes to those who can not only perform the ordinary functions of their work well, but are ready and capable to meet any emergency which may arise, and in war work emergencies are the rule rather than the exception. Detailed information on and application blanks for this work may be had by addressing the Dean of Engineering, State College, New Mexico.

are assessed, each according to his income. No man can offer the excuse that his neighbor escapes what he is made to pay. Therefore, it is incumbent upon all good citizens to aid in carrying out the intent and spirit of the law, which is that the burden of the war tax be evenly distributed and every man compelled to pay his just quota."

U. S. Marshal Hudspeth has been in the county the past week, attending to his official duties.

L. Ernst spent the first part of the week here. Mr. Ernst is watch inspector for the E. P. & S. W., with headquarters at Tucuman, and visits our town regularly, twice-a-month.

Ivan P. French came in Tuesday on a short furlough for a visit to his mother, Mrs. Emma A. Flower, and his sister, Mrs. Oscar N. Rowden. Mr. French is in the Signal Corps and is stationed at Fort Logan, near Houston, Texas.

"Blue" and Worried?

"Blue" worried, half-sick people should find out the cause of their troubles. Often it is merely faulty kidney action, which allows the blood to get loaded up with poisons that irritate the nerves. Backache, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder troubles are added proofs that the kidneys need help. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands thank them for relief from just such troubles.

A Colorado Case

Mrs. Daisie Brunley, 114 Twelfth St., Greeley, Colo., says: "I had a steady ache in my back and frequent attacks of dizziness made me feel weak and miserable. My kidneys acted irregularly. My feet swelled, and I could hardly stand on them. For three months I hardly slept at all and was so nervous I couldn't sit still. I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and the trouble is now entirely gone and I am in good health."

"When I began business," said the plutocrat wearily, "I made a solemn vow that when I had made an even million I would quit."
"But you've made that many times over," said the other man, "and still you are accumulating."
"That's the curse of it. Whenever I think I've made an even million I find on figuring it up it's either a little more or a little less, and I've got to renew the heartrending struggle." And the unfortunate man sighed heavily.

During a Bible lesson a teacher was trying to explain the parable of the tares.
"Can anyone tell me who is like the evil one who sowed the tares?"
A hand instantly shot up from a small boy at the foot of the class.
"Well, John, what person do you say?"
"Please, oh, my mother."
"Why?" asked the teacher in astonishment.
"Well," he answered, crying his parched trousers, "she sews all my tears."

Evidently Contemplated Visit.
Mrs. Johnson had begun to keep hens, while Mr. Johnson cultivated the back garden. One day there were ominous sounds from the cabbage patch, and Mrs. Johnson exclaimed to her little boy:
"Quick, sonny! See if the fowls have got out. I don't know what your father'll say if they're among his vegetables!"
Sonny ran off and came back beaming.
"Yes, mother, they're out!" he cried. But they're just going in again; they are all wiping their feet on the onion bed!"

WASHINGTON SIDELIGHTSWashington Sentries Have Many Amusing Encounters

WASHINGTON.—Contrary to general belief, the sentries guarding Washington's military establishments, bridges and public buildings are not automatons. They can and do saunter, talk, laugh and otherwise act like human beings. But not on duty. But if you can charm up with the chap in khaki at an opportune time, you may be told some funny things—all about strange prowlers seen on the midnight trick, sinister-seeming contrivances discovered under culverts, officers whose identity is mistaken and other things.

A few nights since a half-frozen sentry before the side gate of a big military establishment here beheld a solitary and stooping figure creeping along and eying the portal dubiously. This kept up several minutes, and finally the guard thought it time to interfere. He approached the suspect.

"What do you want around here?" he asked after the sand-eyed person had halted, as directed, swaying slightly.

"Wanna go on in house, but the ol' woman ish 'waitin'!" fortlorily replied the "suspect."

"That's Uncle Sam's house, my friend," replied the sentry, seeing he had a "stew" and not a spy.

"Sh my house," insisted the one with the "merry mucklage." "C'n tell it by front gate."

It took ten minutes to persuade him that he was wrong. There is a famous bridge near Washington where several months ago a man leaped down to his death. It is closely guarded, for it carries a big winter main. Not long after the tragic occurrence, a night wanderer on the bridge came near losing his liberty when a guard saw him stop and commence searching carefully on the sidewalk.

"Whaddye want, a good place to jump from or to put a bum?" queried the man in uniform.

"I want my fountain pen I dropped; got a match?" was the answer.

The pen was found soon, but remembering tales of explosive pens discovered in abandoned German trenches, the guard nearly wrecked the ink-spiller before satisfied it was not full of T. N. T.

New Rules for Stenographers in One War Office

ONE office of the war department doesn't believe in instructions favoring of red tape. So regulations have been evolved for stenographers. Greatly increased efficiency is expected to result. Here are the rules to be followed:

- 1—Conserve air by eliminating some of the unnecessary conversation.
- 2—Conserve shoe leather by remaining at your desk; remember, you are supposed to be a stenographer, not a floorwalker.
- 3—If you're hungry, go out and get something to eat; don't hang around chewing the rug.
- 4—We have wheelless and meatless days; let's have footless days. Keep your feet on the floor, not on your desk.
- 5—Don't acquire the saving habit to such an extent that you go home with your pockets full of paper clips every night. Just because you write shorthand, don't think you have got to be light-fingered.
- 6—If you feel that you must whistle during office hours, please whistle something German, so that the rest of the office will have an excuse for dropping a typewriter on your head.
- 7—Any person or persons having as a part of their lunch hamburger cheese will kindly adjourn to the roof until the ordeal is over. There is a strong reason for this.
- 8—If you feel that you must take home a typewriter now and then, please leave the desk. We can get new typewriters, but desks are hard to get.
- 9—Just because they are using a lot of ammunition in Europe, don't think that you have to powder your nose every ten minutes.
- 10—Make the world safe for democracy; stop throwing milk bottles out of the windows.
- 11—As Abraham Lincoln said in his famous Gettysburg speech: "Eight hours a day for the man who works. Seven hours a day for the government clerk."
- 12—Save a loaf a week. Just because you have a crust, don't say you can loaf around this office, even if you are well bred. Don't come in here with a bun on, either.

Her Darling Boy Was Only a "Mexican Fish Hound"

"OH, THERE'S my darling boy!" Fairly yelping these words, a woman strolling on Tenth street, just north of F street, made for the latter thoroughfare as fast as her feet would carry her. She had a companion with her, and this woman, too, set a hot pace in the direction of the afternoon promenade.

When a woman suddenly yells out on a crowded thoroughfare, "Oh, there's my darling boy," you sort of get interested in the darling one.

When the two women got to F street they stepped across the sidewalk to the curb. There was an automobile standing there, with a young man and a dog on the front seat.

The woman in search of her darling boy threw her arms around the neck of the dog and said: "Oh, you darling thing! You're the prettiest dog in town." The woman had a good eye for dogs.

"What kind of a dog is he?" asked the woman.
The chauffeur winked at the dog and replied calmly:
"Mexican fish hound."

Mrs. Hoover's Cook Becomes an Ardent Hooverizer

IN ALL the land no housewife follows more closely the rulings of the United States food administration than does Mrs. Herbert C. Hoover, wife of the food administrator. The Hoover cook, who has a wide reputation in most exclusive circles of Washington, was one of the first converts to the conservation of food, and one of the most ardent. A prominent Washington woman remarked soon after the Hoover household was established in the national capital:

"You needn't tell me the Hoovers save food. I know the cook, and she couldn't be induced to economize."

Nevertheless, after a time of sorrow and of stress of wounded professional pride the cook became under the direction and persuasion of Mrs. Hoover, an enthusiastic over-producing delicious meals with the least possible outlay of wheat, meat, sugar and fats as the strictest "Hooverite" could wish.

Almost every day is meatless day with the Hoovers, poultry, sea food or occasionally game replacing the beef or other meats that may be shipped across the sea. The servants, of course, have to have meat often, but for the family perhaps once a week, generally less frequently, there is a roast for dinner and what is left over is carefully utilized in some form for luncheon the next day. Sometimes a chop is provided at that meal for the ten-year-old son, who is recovering from a recent illness. Meat is never bought for soups, which are made from vegetables or the parts of poultry not served—the wing tips, feet, neck and gizzard.

Not only are Tuesdays and Saturdays porkless days, but the other five days of the week as well, despite the confessed fondness of the food administrator for his breakfast bacon. Pork, either as ham, bacon, sausage, lard or in other forms, never enters the big red brick house on Massachusetts avenue, where the Hoovers are domiciled. For cooking various vegetable oils or other substitutes are used for lard and butter.

His Limit.

"I understand, Mr. Rasp," began the suave stranger, "that you once voted for the Hon.—"

"Yes," admitted old Rump Rasp. "I voted for him a good many years ago. Also I once applied my youthful tongue to an ice-cold sledge hammer. Likewise, I once paid tuition to a correspondence school of growing tall by mail and thereby becoming irresistible to the ladies. But it won't do you any good to produce that flat package which I observe outlined through your coat and which I suspect is a simple volume of Great Flights of Oratory by American Blatherskites, for while I own up to having been a fool in my time it infuriates me to be called, even by implication, a hopeless darn fool."—Kansas City Star.

Talk and Talkers.

"After all," said Attorney General Gregory at a dinner in Washington, "was there ever a great talker who wasn't a great bore? Look at Coleridge."

"The judge is a splendid talker, isn't he?"

"The finest," said the man, "I ever escaped from."—Case and Comment.

I Feel as I Did Twenty Years Ago.

Mrs. Gertie Ehardt, 215 East First St., Kewanee, Illinois, writes: "I have taken six bottles of your Peruna for a cough, and I am all well. I went over to see a neighbor one day and I had a terrible cough and my eyes were sore. She gave me half a bottle of Peruna last November, and it did me so much good that I bought a bottle, and then when I had finished that I got another, and so on until I have taken almost six bottles and I feel like a new woman. I am fifty-nine years old, and since I have taken the Peruna, I feel as I did twenty years ago. I will always keep Peruna in my house."

Those who object to liquid medicines can secure Peruna tablets.

Win the War by Preparing the Land Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course, but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

Proof that Some Women do Avoid Operations

Mrs. Etta Dorion, of Ogdensburg, Wis., says:

"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

How Mrs. Boyd Avoided an Operation.

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well."

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARY BOYD, 1421 6th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

22 Million Families in the United States

IF EACH FAMILY saved one cup of wheat flour it would amount to 5,500,000 pounds, or more than 28,000 barrels. If this saving was made three times a week, it would amount to 858,000,000 pounds, or 4,377,000 barrels in a year.

You can do your share in effecting this saving and really help to win the war by omitting white bread from one meal today and baking in its place muffins or corn bread made according to this recipe:

Corn Meal Muffins

1/2 cup corn meal	2 tablespoons sugar
1 1/2 cups flour	No eggs
1 teaspoon salt	1 cup milk
4 teaspoons Dr. Price's Baking Powder	2 tablespoons shortening

Mix dry ingredients together into bowl; add milk and melted shortening and beat well. Bake in greased muffin tin in hot oven about 20 minutes. Same batter may be baked as corn bread in greased shallow pan.

Hit Hun Hard

"Therefore, I will save, I will sacrifice, I will endure, I will fight—cheerfully, and to my utmost—as if the whole issue of the struggle depended on me alone!"

The most gigantic drive in history is being made against the allied lines by the ruthless Hun. English, French and Americans are fighting shoulder to shoulder to repel the thrust of the monster and it is confidently felt that they will succeed. But the battle cannot be won in a week, most likely not in a month, possibly not in a year. We are the only nation opposing the barbarous Hun whose resources are untouched and whose wealth in men and means is almost limitless.

Therefore, let every young man, who is without dependents, when called upon, respond cheerfully; and let him remember that the best and truest men of all ages have been willing to die for a principle; and do not let him forget that a man who dodges this issue—the only issue before the American people—that his conscience will haunt him as long as he lives and that future generations will reproach him for not coming to the relief of his country in its time of stress.

But the responsibility is not alone on the boys whom the government has decreed shall bear arms; it is equally as great on those over age, and upon the women, as well, rests a heavy responsibility—but, God bless them, they require no adjuration! for they have met every responsibility. The responsibility on those at home is to save food-stuffs; to buy war savings stamps, and Liberty Bonds—neither a gift—a bonafide and premier investment—to help the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and all kindred associations of mercy and to do everything that will speedily bring the war to a successful conclusion.

Let it not be said that we sent our boys across to face the blood-crazed Hun—the boy who is giving his all—and then neglected to save food and furnish money to the government for his sustenance and means for repelling the onward rush of the Berlin autocracy.

The boys in the trenches are hitting the Hun Hard; the men and women at home can do the same. Let it be the motto of every American, whether at home or in the trenches: "Hit the Hun Hard!"

A Bill we Can Pay

A ten year old boy overheard a conversation about certain bills to be paid, and conceived the idea of making out a bill for his own services. So the next morning he laid this statement on his mother's breakfast plate. "Mother owes Willie for carrying coal six times twenty cents; for bringing water lots of times thirty cents; for going on errands twenty-five cents."

His mother read the bill, but said nothing about it. That evening Willie found on his plate the seventy-five cents and also another bill which read as follows: "Willie owes his mother for his happy home for 10 years, nothing; for his food and clothing, nothing; total nothing."

When Willie saw the seventy-five cents he was pleased. But when he read his mother's bill his eyes grew dim and his lips quivered. Then he took the money to his mother, threw his arms around her neck and begged that she would let him do lots of things for her.

Mother's bill is rarely presented but it will pay each person to think it out and over for himself and then pay it in love and service. —The Dunklin Democrat, Democrat, Kennett, Mo.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

When you compare the low prices of Ford cars with the prices of farm produce, farm stock and everything else on the market, the great value of the Ford car can be fairly estimated. The price for the Ford Touring Car is only $360 f. o. b. Detroit—the same as last year. It is the greatest value, not only among motor cars, but in the whole run of articles grown and manufactured. Think of a five-passenger motor car with the reputation for service, durability and economy that's behind the Ford car, selling for $360! We urge prospective purchasers to give their orders without delay.

Helps Sick Women

Cardui, the woman's tonic, helped Mrs. William Eversole, of Hazel Patch, Ky. Read what she writes: "I had a general breaking-down of my health. I was in bed for weeks, unable to get up. I had such a weakness and dizziness, ... and the pains were very severe. A friend told me I had tried everything else, why not Cardui? ... I did, and soon saw it was helping me ... After 12 bottles, I am strong and well."

Old Foggy Stand From Under

At this time when every thing is being keyed up to the highest pitch of efficiency it would seem that the wise thing for the merchants of Carrizozo and White Oaks to do would be to change their present obsolete way of delivering goods to a systematic cooperative plan which could be operated at a price, at least forty per cent cheaper than their present delivery service costs them.

It has been authoritatively stated that under this old, belated, devil-take-the-hindmost-plan the "purchaser pays from 3 to 40 cents for delivery charges, on every dollar he spends for goods."

There has been so much said and written about the pernicious effects of patronizing mail-order houses, on rural town communities, that one would think all the small towns within the first and second zone radius of large cities would be obliterated. 'Tis true they staggered for awhile under the blow dealt their primitive business ways by the mail-order houses and parcel post, but they called their mental capabilities into action and they found that by adopting efficient and intelligent business methods they could compete with the new combined adversary.

There are beautiful towns, prosperous and growing, within the first and second zone radius of Chicago, Cleveland and all the large cities, but efficiency and intelligent service is the keynote throughout the business and the municipal government of these towns. In them you find no such bungling in delivery as we have here but it is all done with the exactness and definiteness as is the delivering of U. S. mail.

It has come to a point where we of the southwest must draw more closely together in a common bond of self-sacrifice and team work. Selfishness must be kept in the background if indeed it can not be buried.

This war is teaching marvelous lessons and if we take advantage of them and perpetuate them the great cost of the conflict, in blood and treasure, will not have been entirely lost.

If only we could awake to the real facts, the serious import of the situation!

Every housewife in the county should read what the returned German Ambassador, James W. Gerard, has written about "What the German Women Have Done that the American Women Can Now Do".

It certainly would fill every one with enthusiasm and cause them to demand the adoption of less bungling and expensive business systems.

Our women are not the inadequate, thoughtless creatures that our business men seem to believe. They are capable of planning into the future for at least a length of twenty-four hours.

Serves Without Compensation

Fifty-seven years old, yet as spry as almost any soldier in camp, of the Jewish faith, yet giving all his time to Young Men's Christian Association work, Morris Isaacs of Cincinnati, Ohio, has been the subject of more than one question at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Alabama, where the Ohio National Guardsmen are encamped.

"Why does he do it?" ask his fellow-citizens of Cincinnati, knowing that Mr. Isaacs gave up a profitable business, and that he is engaging in Red Triangle work without salary, paying his own expenses in the camp where his only son is captain.

There are two reasons, and Morris Isaacs is willing to give them both.

"Love for my boy, and love for the army Y. M. C. A. which serves our boys wherever they go with the colors," he says.

Mr. Isaacs is one of the leading figures in the recreative life at Camp Sheridan. He arranges the boxing shows, figures out the entertainments, and raises money whenever the special Army Y. M. C. A. fund at Camp Sheridan gets slim.

Something like $3,500 was needed to finish equipping the new Red Triangle Coliseum, the largest building in any training camp in the country. Mr. Isaacs, entrained for Cincinnati, and in less than one day raised $4,000.

His son, Captain Stanley Isaacs, of Company K of the old First Ohio Regiment, was recently notified of impending transfer at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina.

"I want to continue in the Y. M. C. A. service wherever I go, serving without compensation, except the good will of the boys," Mr. Isaacs told the Army Y. M. C. A. secretary at Camp Sheridan, A. G. Bookwalter, former general secretary of the Cincinnati Y. M. C. A. "I will remain with you till we get the 'Buckeye' Coliseum in shape, but then I would like permission to follow my boy."

The military authorities, appreciating the value of Mr. Isaacs' work at Camp Sheridan, and also his wish to be near his only son, have permitted Captain Isaacs to remain with the Ohio regiment.

Mr. Isaacs wants to go to France as an Army Y. M. C. A. worker when his son is ordered overseas.

Corona

Mrs. Frank Standhardt and children are spending a few days with Mrs. Brack Sloan at Ancho.

Carroll Johnson of Carrizozo was a recent visitor to Corona.

E. M. Brickley of Carrizozo, and H. B. Jones of Tucumcari, were in Corona Thursday, looking after banking interests here.

E. L. Moulton made a business trip to Estancia Thursday returning Friday.

Ed Harris and daughter, Miss Vera, of Carrizozo were recent Corona visitors. Mr. Harris purchased a Buick 6 from the agency here.

The Red Cross ladies shipped a third consignment of finished hospital garments this week. Quite a number of knitted garments were also in the shipment.

Buster Brown and Tige were in town Monday. A good sized crowd gathered at the Trading Co.'s store to see and to hear Buster Brown tell about the Brown Shoe Company. The children of Corona were quite interested as it was the first visit of Buster and Tige to this place.

Final plans have been made for Red Cross benefit dance to be given Friday night and it is hoped that there will be good attendance.

Public Lands

Several thousand printed copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Public lands for the last fiscal year were delivered this week to the office of land commissioner Robert P. Ervien, for general distribution among citizens of New Mexico who are interested in knowing the status of the vast land tracts owned by the state.

The current report of the Land Commissioner is in more careful detail than has ever been attempted before. It shows the exact status of each of the land grants as to sale, lease and selection, the revenue it is producing for the institution it is supporting, and the growth of this revenue from year to year from establishment of the office.

The importance of this report is indicated in the following extracts from a letter by Governor Lindsey, written to Land Commissioner Ervien in acknowledging receipt of the report:

"It is apparent," Governor Lindsey's letter says, "that the revenues from the state lands have become one of the most important of the State's sources of income and that the volume of these revenues probably will be increased from year to year, with the continued exercise of good business policy and judgment in the administration of the lands."

"The report, I believe, should be printed and given as wide distribution as possible, and I would urge personally that every citizen and particularly every taxpayer in New Mexico give the report a thorough and thoughtful reading."

A copy will be sent free to any citizen who will apply to the State Land Office, Santa Fe, N. M.

The Real Adventure

A NOVEL

By Henry Kitchell Webster

(Copyright 1916, The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

There was something peculiarly horrifying to him in the exhibition Randolph was making of himself. He'd never in his life taken a drink except convivially, and then he took as little as would pass muster. Going off alone and deliberately fuddling oneself, as a means of escaping unpleasant realities, struck him as an act of the basest cowardice. But for that picture of Rose he'd have gone long ago and left Randolph to his bemused reflections. Only . . . Rose had asked him to drop in on the doctor for a visit. "Did she mean she wanted him to try to help?"

He tried, though not very successfully, to conceal his violent disrelish of the task, when he said: "Look here, Jim! What is the matter with you? Are you sober enough to tell me?"

Randolph put down his glass. "I've told you," he said. "I'm Eleanor's kept man. Well kept, oh, yes! Beautifully kept. I'm nothing but a possession of hers! A trophy of sorts, an ornament. I'm something she's made. I have a big practice. I'm the most fashionable doctor in Chicago. They come here, the women, in shoals. That's Eleanor's doing. I'm a faker, a fraud. I pose for them. I play up, I give them what they want. And that's her doing. They go silly about me; fancy they're in love with me."

"I haven't done a lick of honest work in the last year. I can't work. She won't let me work. She—another me. Wherever I turn, there she is, smoothing things out, trying to make it easy, trying to anticipate my wants. I've only one want. That's to be left alone. She can't do that. She's insatiable. There's always something more she's trying to get, and I'm always trying to keep something away from her, and failing."

"And why? Do you want to know why, Aldrich? That's the cream of the thing. Because we're in love with each other. She wants me to live on her love. To have nothing else to live on."

"Do you want to know what my notion of heaven is? It would be to go off alone, with one suit of clothes in a handbag, oh, and fifty or a hundred dollars in my pocket—I wouldn't mind that! I don't want to be a tramp—to some mining town, or slum, where I could start a game of 'unlucky' where the things I'd got would be accident cases, confinement cases; real things, urgent things, that night and day are all alike to. I'd like to start again and be poor; get this stick of easy money out of my nostrils. I'd like to see if I could make good on my own."

"I came back from New York, after that look at Rose, meaning to do it; meaning to talk it out with Eleanor and tell her why, and then go. Well, I talked. Talked cheap. But I didn't go. I'll never go. I'll go on getting softer and more of a fake; more dependent. And Eleanor will go on eating me up until the last thing in me that's me myself is gone. And then, some day, she'll look at me and see that I'm nothing."

Then, with suddenly thickened speech (an affection, perhaps), he looked up at Rodney and demanded:

"What are you looking so solemn about? Can't you take a joke? Come along and have another drink."

"No," Rodney said, "I'm going. And you'd better get to bed."

Rodney walked home that night like a man dazed. The vividness of one blazing idea blinded him. The thing that Randolph had seen and lacked the courage to do; the thing Rodney despised him for a coward for having failed to do—that thing Rose had done.

Without knowing it, yielding to a blind, unreasoned instinct, he'd wanted Rose to live on his love. He'd tried to smooth things out for her, anticipate her wants. He'd wanted her soft, helpless, dependent. She'd seen, even then, something he'd blinded himself to: that love, by itself, was not enough. That it could poison, as well as feed.

But she had won, among the rest of her spells of victory, the thing she had originally set out to get. His friendship and respect. Friendship, he remembered her saying, was a thing you had to earn. When you'd earned it, it couldn't be withheld from you. Well, it was right she should be told that; made to understand it to the full. He couldn't ask her to come back to him. But she must know that her respect was as necessary now to him as she'd once said his was to her. He must see her and tell her that.

He stopped abruptly in his walk. His bones, as the Psalmist said, turned to water. How should he confront that gaze of hers, which knew so much and understood so deeply—the with the memory of his two last ignominious encounters with her behind him?

CHAPTER XXIV.

Friends.

Except for the vacuum where the core and heart of it all ought to have been, Rose's life in New York during the year that got her on the highroad to success as a designer of costumes for the theater was a good life, broadening, stimulating, seasoning. It rested, to begin with, on a foundation of adequate material comfort which the unworldly physical privations of the six months that preceded it made seem like positive luxury.

For several months after she came to New York to work for Galbraith she found him a martinet. She never once caught that twinkling gleam of understanding in his eye which had meant so much to her during the rehearsals of "The Girl Upstairs." His manner toward her carried out the tone of the letter she'd got from him in Chicago. It was stiff, formal, severe. He seldom praised her work, and never ungrudgingly. His censure was rare, too, to be sure, but that obviously was because Rose almost never gave him an excuse for it. Working for him in this mood gave her the uneasy sensation one experiences when walking abroad under a solitary, overcast sky, with mutterings and flashes in it. And then one night the storm broke.

They had lingered in the theater after the dismissal of a rehearsal, to talk over a change in one of the numbers Rose had been working on. It refused to come out satisfactorily. Rose thought she saw a way of doing it that would work better, and she had been telling him about it. Eagerly, at first, and with a blimp directness which, however, became clouded and troubled when she felt he wasn't paying attention. It was a difficulty with him she had encountered before.

But tonight, after an angry turn down the aisle and back, he suddenly cried out: "I don't know. I don't know what you're talking about. I don't know, and I don't care." And then, confronting her, their faces not a foot apart, for by now she had got to her feet, his hands gripped together and shaking, his teeth clenched, his eyes glowing there in the half-light of the auditorium almost like an animal's, he demanded: "Can you see what's the matter with me? Haven't you seen it yet?"

Of course she saw it now, plainly enough. She sat down again, managing an air of deliberation about it, and gripped the back of the orchestra chair in front of her. He remained standing over her there in the aisle.

When the heightening tension of the silence that followed this outburst had grown absolutely unendurable, she spoke. But the only thing she could find to say was almost ludicrously inadequate.

"No, I didn't see it until now. I'm sorry."

"You didn't see it," he echoed. "I know you didn't. You've never seen me at all, from the beginning, as anything but a machine. But why haven't you? You're a woman. If I ever saw a woman in my life, you're one all the way through. Why couldn't you see that I was a man? It isn't because I've got gray hair, nor because I'm fifty years old. I don't believe you're like that. But even back there in Chicago, the night we walked down the avenue from that store—or the night we had supper together after the show—"

"I suppose I ought to have seen," she said dutifully. "Ought to have known that that was all there was to it. But I didn't."

"Well, you see it now," he said savagely fairly, and strode away up the aisle and then back to her. He sat down in the seat in front of her and turned around. "I want to see your face," he said. "There's something I've got to know. Something you've got to tell me. You said once, back there in Chicago, that there was only one person who really mattered to you. I want to know who that person is. What he is. Whether he's still the one person who really matters. If he isn't, I'll take my chance."

Remembering the scene afterward, Rose was a little surprised that she'd been able to answer him as she did, without a hesitation or a stammer, and with a straight gaze that held his until she had finished.

"The only person in the world," she said, "who ever has mattered to me, or ever will matter, is my husband. I fell in love with him the day I met him. I was in love with him when I left him. I'm in love with him now. Everything I do that's any good is just something he might be proud of if he knew it. And every failure is just something I hope I would make him understand and not despise me for. It's months since I've seen him, but there isn't a day, there isn't an hour in a day, when I don't think about him—and want him. I don't know whether I'll ever see him again, but if I don't, it won't make any difference with that. That's why I didn't see what I might have seen about you. It wasn't possible for me to see. I'd never have seen it if you hadn't told me in so many words, like this. Do you see now?"

He turned away from her with a nod, and put his hands up to his face. She waited a moment to see whether he had anything else to say, for the habit of waiting for his dismissal was too strong to be broken even for a situation like this. But finding that he hadn't, she got up and walked out of the theater.

There was an hour after she had gained the haven of her apartment when she pretty well went to pieces. So this was all, was it, that she owed her illusory appearance of success to? The amorous selfishness of a man old enough to be her father! Once more, she blissfully and ignorantly unsuspecting all the while, it was love that had made her world go round. The same attraction that James Randolph long ago had told her about. All she'd accomplished in that bitter year since she left Rodney had been to make another man fall in love with her!

It was natural, of course, that the relation between them, after that, should not prove quite so simple and manageable. There were breathless days when the storm visibly hung in the sky; there were strained, stiff, self-conscious moments of rigidly enforced politeness. Things got said despite his resolute repression that had, as resolutely, to be ignored. But in the intervals of these failures there emerged a new thing—genuine friendship, partnership.

It was just after Christmas that Abe Shuman took her away from Galbraith and put her to work exclusively on costumes. And the swift sequence of events within a month thereafter launched her in an independent business: the new partnership, with the details of which, through Jimmy Wallace, you are already sufficiently acquainted.

Her partner was Alice Perosini. She was the daughter of a rich Italian Jew, a beautiful—really a wonderful—person to look at, but a little unaccountable, especially with the gorgeous clothes she wore, in the circle of women who "did things," of which Rose had become a part. Rose took her time about deciding that she liked her, but ended by preferring her to all the rest. But the fact that they had become partners served, somehow, to divert a relation between them which might otherwise have developed into a first-class friendship. Not that they quarreled, or even disappointed each other in the close contacts of the day's work. But at the end of the day's work they tended to fly apart rather than to stick together. More and more Rose turned to Galbraith for a friendship that really understood; gripped deep.

There were long stretches of days, of course, when they saw nothing of each other, and Rose, as long as she had plenty to do, was never conscious of missing him. But the prospect of an empty Sunday morning, for instance, was always enormously brightened if he called up to say that it was empty for him, too, and shouldn't they go for a walk or a ferry-ride somewhere?

All told, she learned more about men, as such, from him than ever she had learned, consciously at least, from Rodney. She'd never been able to regard her husband as a specimen. He was Rodney, and generous, and it had never occurred to her either to generalize from him to other men or to explain anything about him on the mere ground of his masculinity. She began doing that now a little, and the exercise opened her eyes.

In a good many ways Galbraith and her husband were a good deal alike. Both were rough, direct, a little remorseless, and there was in both of them, right alongside the best and finest and clearest things they had, an unaccountable vein of childishness. She'd never been willing to call it by that name in Rodney. But when she saw it in Galbraith too, she wondered. Was that just the man of it? Did a man, as long as he lived, need somebody in the role of—mother? The thought all but suffocated her.

One Saturday morning, toward the end of May, Galbraith called up and wanted to know if she wouldn't come over to his Long Island farm the following morning and spend the day. She had visited the place two or three times, and had always enjoyed it immensely there. It wasn't much of a farm, but there was a delightful old Revolutionary farmhouse on it, with ceilings seven feet high, and casement windows, and the floors of all the rooms on different levels; and Galbraith, there, was always quite at his best. His sister and her husband, whom he had brought over from England when he bought the place, ran it for him. Rose accepted eagerly.

Galbraith met her with a dogcart and a fat pony, and when they had jogged their way to their destination, they spent what was left of the morning looking over the farm. Then there was a midday farm dinner, which Rose astonished herself by dining with as it deserved, and by feeling sleepy at the conclusion of.

Coming into the veranda about four o'clock, and finding her, Galbraith suggested that they go for a walk. Two hours later, having swung her legs over a stone wall which had a comfortably inviting flat top, she remained sitting there and let her gaze rest, unfocused, on the pleasant farm land below them.

After a glance at her he leaned back against the wall at her side and began filling his pipe. She dropped her hand on his nearer shoulder. After all these months of friendship it was the first approach to a caress that had passed between them. "You're a good friend," she said; and then the hand that had rested on him so lightly suddenly gripped hard. "And I guess I need one."

He went on filling his pipe. "Anything special you need one for?" he asked.

She gave a ragged little laugh. "I guess not. Just somebody strong and steady to hold on to like this."

"Well," he said, very deliberately, "you want to realize this: You say I'm a friend, and I am, but if there is anything in this friendship which can be of use to you, you're entitled to everything there is in it. Because you made it."

"One person can't make a friendship," she said. "But you are content with it, aren't you? Like this?"

He smoked in silence for a minute; then: "Why, 'content' is hardly the word for it. When I think what it was I wanted and what you've given me instead—something I wouldn't trade for all the love in the world."

"I'd like to believe it was a better thing," she said, "but I'm afraid I can't."

"Neither could I when I was—how old are you?—twenty-four. Perhaps when you're fifty-one you can."

"I suppose so," she said absently. "Perhaps if it were a question of choosing between a love that hadn't any friendship in it and a friendship . . . But it can't be like that! Can it? Can't one have both? Can't a man—love a woman and be her friend and partner all at the same time?"

"I can't answer for every man," he said reflectively. "But I've a notion that nice out of a dozen, if you could get down to the actual bedrock facts about them, would own up that if they were in love with a woman—really, you know—they wouldn't want her for a partner, and wouldn't be able to see her as a friend. That's just a guess, of course. But there's one thing I know, and that is that I couldn't."

She gave a little shiver. "Oh, what a mess it is!" she said. "What a perfectly hopeless blunder it is!" She slid down from the wall. "Come, let's walk."

He fell in beside her, and they tramped sturdily along for a while in silence. At last he said: "I don't know that I can explain it, but I don't think I'd call it a blunder that a strip of spring steel can't bend in your fingers like copper, and still go on being a spring. You see, a man wants his work, and then he wants something that's altogether apart from his work. Love's about as far away as anything he can get. So that the notion of our working ourselves half to death over the same job, and then going home together—"

"Yes," she admitted. "I can see that. But that doesn't cover friendship."

He owned that it didn't. "But when I'm in love with a woman—this isn't a fact I'm proud of, but it's true—I'm jealous of her. I want to be everything to her. I want her to think nobody else could be right and I be wrong. And I want to be able to think the same of her." He thought it over a bit longer, and then went on: "No, I've been in love with women I thought were lying to me, cheating me; women I've hated; women I've known hated me. But I've never been in love with a woman who was my friend." He had been tramping along, communing with his pipe, thinking aloud. If he'd been watching Rose's face he wouldn't have gone so far.

"Well, if it's like that—" she said, and the quality of her voice drew his full attention instantly—"If love has to be like that, then the game doesn't seem worth going on with. You can't live with it, and you can't live—without it." Her voice dropped a little, but gained in intensity. "At least I can't. I don't believe I can." She stopped and faced him. "What can one do?" she demanded. She turned away with a despairing gesture and stood gazing out, tear-blinded, over the little valley the hilltop they had reached commanded.

"You want to remember this," he said at last. "I've been talking about myself. I might have been different if my first love affair had been an altogether different thing. And I'm not, thank God, a fair sample."

"My love affair brought me a home and—kids," she said. "There are two of them—twins—a year and a half old now; and I went off and left them; left him. I thought that by earning my own way, building a life that he didn't surround, as you say, I could win his friendship. And have his love besides. I don't suppose you would have believed there could be such a fool in the world as I was to do that."

He took a while digesting this truly amazing statement of hers. But at last he said: "No, I wouldn't call you a fool. I call a fool a person who thinks he can get something for nothing. You didn't think that. You were willing to pay a heavy price it must have been, too—for what you wanted. And I've an idea, you know, that you never really pay without getting something."

"I don't know," she said raggedly. "Perhaps . . ."

There was a seven-thirty train to town, and they finished their walk at the station. She got back to her apartment about nine. Two corners of white projected from under her door, a visiting card and a folded bit of paper. It was Rodney's card, and on it he'd written: "Sorry to have missed you. I'll come back at eight."

Her shaking fingers fumbled pitifully over the folds of the note, but she got it open at last. It was from him, too. It read:

Dear Rose: This is hard luck. I suppose you're off for a week-end somewhere. I want very much to see you. When you come back and have leisure for me will you call me up? I know how busy you are so I'll wait until I hear from you. RODNEY.

When the telephone girl switched her to the information desk, and the information clerk said, "Mr. Rodney Aldrich? Just a moment," and then: "Mr. Aldrich is in fifteen taught five," the dry contraction in her throat made it impossible for her to speak. She couldn't answer his first "Hello," and he said it again, sharply, "Hello, what is it?"

And then suddenly her voice came back. A voice that startled her with its distinctness. "Hello, Rodney," she said, "this is Rose."

There was a perfectly blank silence after that, and then the crisp voice of an operator somewhere—"Waiting?"

"Yes," she heard Rodney say, "get off the line." And then to her: "I came to see you this afternoon, and again tonight."

"Yes, I know," she said. "I just this minute got in. Can't you come back again now?" How in the world, she wondered, could she manage her voice like that! From the way it sounded she might have been speaking to Alice Perosini; and yet her shake-

ing hand could hardly hold the receiver. She heard him say:

"It's pretty late, isn't it? I don't want to . . . You'll be tired and . . ."

"It's not too late for me," she said, "only you might come before it gets any later."

She managed to wait until she heard him say "All right" before she hung up the receiver. Then a big, racking sob, not to be denied any longer, pounced upon her and shook her.

CHAPTER XXV.

Cœur-de-Rose.

It was altogether fortunate for Rose that she had attempted no preparation, because the situation she found herself in when she'd opened the door for her husband, shaken hands with him, led him into her sitting room and asked him to sit down, was one which the wildest cast of her imagination would never have suggested as a possible one for her and Rodney.

It was his manner, she felt sure, that had created it; his rather formal attitude; the way he held his hat. It was the slightly anxious, very determined attitude of an estimable and rather shy young man making his first call on a young lady upon whom he is desperately desirous of making a favorable impression.

And he was Rodney, and she was Rose. It was like an absurd dream. "Won't you smoke?" she asked suddenly, and hurried on when he hesitated. "I don't do it myself, but most of my friends do, and I keep the things." From a drawer in her writing desk she produced a tin box of cigarettes. "They're your kind—unless you've changed," she commented, and went over to the mantel-shelf for an ash tray and a match safe. The match safe was empty and she left the room to get a fresh supply from her kitchen.

On the inner face of her front door was a big mirror, and in it, as she came back through the unlighted passage, she saw her husband. He was sitting just as she'd left him, and as his face was partly turned away from her, it could not have been from the expression of it that she got her revelation. But she stopped there in the dark and caught her breath and leaned back against the wall and squeezed the tears out of her eyes.

He stayed that first evening a little less than an hour, and when he got up to go she made no effort to detain him. The thing had been, as its unbroken surface could satisfy, a highly successful first call. Before she let him go, though, she asked him how long he was going to be in New York, and on getting a very indeterminate answer which offered a minimum of "two or three days" and a maximum that could not even be guessed at, she said:

"I hope you're not going to be too dreadfully busy for us to see a lot of each other. I wish we might manage it once every day."

That shook him; for a moment, she thought the lightning was going to strike, and stood very still holding her breath, waiting for it.

But he steadied himself, said he could certainly manage that if she could, and, as the elevator came up in response to her ring, said that he would call her up in the morning at her office. As she cuddled her cheek into the pillow that night, Rose smiled her old, wide smile. She was the happiest person in the world.

That manner of Rodney's listed—repeated, at least, whenever Rose and he were together—almost unaltered, for two whole days. There was a visit of his to her workshop, where he listened intently to her explanations of her tools and her working methods. There was a luncheon, at which, unwinding, he made her tell him the whole story of her success; and a dinner and theater, after which he brought her home in a taxi, and, having told the chauffeur to wait, formally escorted her to the elevator. But with the last of the next day's light, the ice broke up and the floods came.

She had taken him to a studio late in the upper sixties just off West End avenue, the proprietors of the studio being a tattered, bearded, blond anarchist of a painter and his exceedingly pretty, smart, frivolous-looking wife.

The two men had instinctively drawn controversial swords almost at sight of each other, and for the hour and a half that they were together the combat raged mightily, to the unmarked satisfaction of both participants. The feelings of the bystanders were perhaps more diverse, but Rose, at least, enjoyed herself thoroughly, over seeing her husband's big, formidable, finely poised mind in action again. The talk, of course, ranged everywhere: socialism, feminism, law and its crimes, art, and the social mind.

It was half-past six or thereabouts when they left the studio, and the late May afternoon was at its loveliest. "I want to walk," said Rose, "after that tea, if I'm ever to want any dinner." He nodded a little absently, she thought, and fell in step beside her. There was no mention at any time of their destination.

Art of Hanging Pictures.

Pictures should have a strong base below, a large centerpiece above, and a higher point above this, thereby meeting architectural demands. A sofa against the wall, or a bookcase, or a large table may form the base, with an important picture as the centerpiece, either square or oblong. At all events the base should be wider than the structure above, and there should be a higher point of apex. The best of one's pictures should be placed over the fireplace.

To drive a tank, handle the guns, and sweep over the enemy trenches, takes strong nerves, good rich blood, a good stomach, liver and kidneys. When the time comes, the man with red blood in his veins "is up and at it." He has iron nerves for hardships—an interest in his work grips him. That's the way you feel when you have taken a blood and nerve tonic, made up of Blood Root, Golden Seal root, Stone root, Cherry bark, and rolled into a sugar-coated tablet and sold in sixty-cent vials by almost all druggists for past fifty years as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This tonic, in liquid or tablet form, is just what you need this spring to give you vim, vigor and vitality. At the flag end of a hard winter, no wonder you feel "run-down," blue, out of sorts. Try this "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's. Don't wait! To-day is the day to begin! A little "paw," and you laugh and live.

The best means to all the machinery of the body, put tone into the liver, kidneys and circulatory system, is to first practice a good house-cleaning. I know of nothing better as a laxative than a vegetable pill made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap. This is commonly sold by all druggists as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and should be taken at least once a week to clear the twenty-five feet of intestines. You will thus clean the system—expel the poisons and keep well. Now is the time to clean house. Give yourself a spring house cleaning.—Adv.

KIDNEY TROUBLE NOT EASILY RECOGNIZED

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected

An examining physician for one of the prominent life insurance companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kinner's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

We find that Swamp-Root is strictly an herbal compound and we would advise our readers who feel in need of such a remedy to give it a trial. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kinner & Co., Birmingham, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

LITHUANIA

Kaunas, Prussia, Claimed by the New Lithuania.

LITHUANIA, which has declared its independence of Russia, has a history that for hundreds of years was intertwined with that of Poland, with which it long maintained a loose sort of union. At the time of the dismemberment of Poland it went for the most part to Russia. Lithuania now comprises the Russian "governments" of Kovno, Vilna, Grodno, Vitebsk, Minsk, Mogilev, and Suwalki (the last a part of Russian Poland.) This territory is almost entirely occupied just now by the Germans, who swept over it in their campaign of 1915 against the Russians. In the heyday of the Lithuanians the dominions of their princes extended, however, far beyond the limits of today, reaching even the shores of the Black sea, and embracing districts now included in Ukraine, Poland, and other parts of Russia.

A most interesting point about the claims of those who have brought about the Lithuanian declaration of independence is that, in their extreme form, they contemplate not only the separation of Lithuania from Russia but also the incorporation into the new state of German territory which centuries ago formed part of Lithuania. This district includes the important city of Kaunas, in what is now East Prussia, as well as Tilsit and other towns. If this district should form part of the new Lithuania, and if an independent Poland should have free access to the sea after the war through the seaport of Danzig, formerly Polish and now German, there would be a small wedge of German territory, isolated from the rest of the empire, between Polish Danzig and Lithuanian Kaunas. The Lithuanians re-emphasize their claims to Kaunas and other cities now under German or Russian rule by pointing to the fact that they have names for them in the Lithuanian language which the cities bore in the old days before they were seized by Teutons or Slavs.

Once a Great Principality.

The Lithuanian nation in the fourth century of our era was living along the coast of the Baltic sea between Riga and Kaunas.

From the tenth to the sixteenth century the Lithuanian principality extended from the Baltic to the Black sea. In that territory were White Russians and Ukrainians or Little Russians. White Russians are mostly of Lithuanian stock. Whoever goes from Lithuania to White Russia soon notices that the same types, customs and festivities exist there. The language of White Russia is 25 per cent Lithuanian, and the attitude of the people toward the Lithuanians is very friendly.

The Lithuanians are Indo-Aryans, fair, light-haired, blue-eyed, tall, and strong. They are in no way related to the Slav or Teuton. They are said to have crossed from Asia to Europe about 2,000 B. C. They settled along the Black sea, near the mouth of the Danube. Gradually they were driven by other races until they came to the shores of the Baltic where they finally settled. Here Lithuanians grew and prospered. They were peaceful folk, never fighting unless attacked, busy with agricultural pursuits, and a few with hunting and fishing. As a nation they were prevented from going into manufacturing or into commerce by physical surroundings, but some of the more venturesome made trips to Russian territory with cargoes of apples and various products of their country. The language of the Lithuanians has been preserved to this day. Some even say that it is the oldest language in use. It closely resembles the Sanskrit and in many cases of research work, is the key to it.

Beat Germans and Mongols.

The Lithuanians lived in clans until the thirteenth century, when, because of national danger, they banded together. They chose Rimgaudas as the first grand duke of Lithuania, and he soon collected a large army. He defeated the Germans and stopped the western advance of the Mongolians. He likewise defeated the Russians and increased the territory of Lithuania considerably.

Mindaugas, the next grand duke, a capable organizer and administrator, continued the work successfully. Gedeminas, a shrewd diplomat, as is shown in his correspondence with the popes of Rome and the Teutonic order, was the next grand duke of note. He established the grand duchy of Lithuania on a firm basis, vanquished the Russians, Teutons, and especially the Tartars, and so helped save Europe from the greatest disaster that could have befallen it—Invasion and occupation by Mongolians. At this time Lithuania extended from the Baltic sea to the Black sea. After the death of Gedeminas, his two sons, Algirdas and Jogaila, reigned, and waged battles with Teutons and Slavs.

In 1569 a sort of dual Polish-Lithuanian government was adopted. Even then, Lithuania kept its independence. In the three partitions of Poland the major part of Lithuania was annexed by Russia and the smaller by Germany. Thus Lithuania was removed from the map of the world. The people were forbidden to use the Lithuanian language, and the possession of any Lithuanian books, even prayer books, was considered a political crime, and schools teaching Lithuanian were closed. The Russian government prohibited the use of any type in print but the Russian. The people as a result, smuggled in books and newspapers printed in Latin type, from Germany. Eventually the imperial order was revoked and the use of Latin type re-established. From that time on Lithuanian literature has flourished, many newspapers having been published and many books printed.

There are probably about 7,500,000 persons of genuine Lithuanian stock. In addition to these, the Lithuanian state would include 1,500,000 Poles, Jews, Russians, and Germans, making a total of 9,000,000 for Lithuania proper. If Lettland should be united with Lithuania it would add 2,500,000 Letts, making a grand total population of 11,500,000 for the new nation.

Russian Peasant's Hard Life.

The whole existence of the Russian peasant is out of joint. He is born in a world of earth and wood, where his life is circumscribed by a log cabin that is thatched in fall, when it assumes an appearance of tidiness, but becomes a huge harp for the March winds to play their woeful dirges on. The thatch is fed to the few starving animals, and the disposable wooden props and decorations used to cook dinner with long before the approach of spring. Here between the unplastered, undecorated walls he lives with his horse, his pig, his hens—always provided he has any—under the same roof, glad of their sociability and animal warmth, being much in need of both. His home is one of the mass of slanting, lopsided, weather-beaten, broken-down huts that stand huddled together, freezing in God's solemn peacefulness and uncanny dreaminess. Enchantingly idyllic on a canvas, but a dreadful place to live in.

Java's Sugar Production.

Java is such a fruitful land that one hesitates to specify the principal crop but it is one of the great sugar-producing countries of the world. The annual export of sugar amounts to something like 1,700,000 tons. People are so accustomed to thinking of sugar in terms of pounds that nearly 2,000,000 tons of sugar seems to have a stupefying effect on the mind. There are more than 400,000 acres of land under cultivation in sugar on the island of Java and the average yield per acre is four and one-half tons, which is a yield that is high above the average of sugar land.

GOWNS SHOW AN ALGERIAN SKIRT

New York.—The persistence shown by France in the dressmaking houses in continuing a certain trick for several years, deserves more attention than is usually accorded it, writes Alma Rittenhouse.

A study of the obstinate way in which Paris designers have held on to a thing they liked might go far toward convincing a vast number of the critics of women's apparel that fashions are not as flighty as they seem. The weather vane turns, it is true, but it swirls back into the same quarter so frequently that at times there is a feeling that it changes little.

The American shops, it is claimed, constantly convince their patrons that an old gown must be replaced by a new one by showing a revolution in silhouette.

We have millions of women to dress, where France has thousands, and we have a population that is quite capable of indulging in its desire for new clothes from the rim of the arctic circle to a line above the tropics.

It is a well-known fact that the American buyers who go to Paris to get new clothes often refuse lovely gowns if they bear a close kinship to those that were sold the year before. They wave such frocks away with the remark that American women must have novelty.

This act has always depressed the designers in Paris, who care for beauty and detail rather than for startling changes, and it is the French designers who say that they rack their brains for more than they would if their clientele were only Rome, Paris and London.

It is this underlying trait in the French dressmakers that gives them the desire to persist in a certain line—which is coming back to the original discussion.

Now the Zouave Skirt.

This line happens to be, at the present moment, that tucked-in effect at the hem of the skirt, which is suggestive of the trousers of the Algerian troops.

Nobody would remember, probably, the exact date of the beginning of this idea, but it was evolved long before the war. It has been brought out in various kinds of skirts.

The house of Callot was probably the first to bring out the idea in a narrow skirt, but it did not take.

The sketch shows a combination of two of the most fashionable fabrics of the spring. The skirt is short and narrow with a white matelasse hem and panel at the side. The bodice is slim in outline, with long sleeves, and shows a slightly low, slender vest of the matelasse held in by two girdles of black satin.

Poirot, who has a devotional attitude toward anything that comes out of the East, used the skirt throughout his years of success.

Cherut adopted it in a modified manner half a dozen years ago. Jenny took it up about two winters ago and accentuated it in her popular costumes in such a manner that America grew more weary of it through this channel than any other. Somehow, as Jenny made it, it did not savor of the East. It was merely awkward and extremely girlish.

Last autumn the immense bulk of the American public looked with a shrug of the shoulders at the pink and blue taffeta skirts that were tucked up at the hem and caught here and there with a formal little bouquet of roses. How stale and stupid Paris is! was the comment. Can't she ever get it into her head that America does not want that loose, overfull skirt with its ungraceful line about the ankles? Debutantes and young girls continued to dance in this kind of skirt wherever the fiddles sounded, but women of more mature years dismissed it as a fashion from the start.

Now, here it is again, not only here, but very much accentuated and ac-

This dinner frock is of black taffeta and the sturdy black silk tulle which is embroidered in a rose design in colored silks. The skirt is made of two flounces of this tulle, and it shows again at the girdle. There is a knotted sash of taffeta that hangs at one side.

Accepted as the leading silhouette among certain houses that establish fashions.

The first French gowns that come over show it; the American dressmakers who are preparing for a brisk spring trade speak of it as a powerful factor in the shaping of the new fashions. And the interesting part of it is that it entirely changes the silhouette.

This seems to be in contrast with the stated fact that France is persistent in certain things and maintains a certain line for a longer period of time than America. The truth is that France persists with a trick, but changes the silhouette and still uses the trick, and that is what she has done in the new Algerian skirt.

It is difficult to say whether the trousers of the French troops in Algiers give the clue to this new skirt or whether it was the entire array of men in baggy trousers which curve in below the knees to fit the legs.

Here is the Silhouette.

The waist is normally large, the line down the hips is either straight or slightly bulging through the fullness of the material, and the hem is exceedingly narrow and tucked under. A woman wearing the most fashionable of these skirts, with high boots added thereto, will look at a slight distance as though she wore baggy trousers and army boots.

To the majority of women this news may not be welcome. They will fancy a far more sensational garment than what actually exists. That mil revolution against the sheath and the hobble skirt may also crop up against this Algerian skirt, but both the other features of fashion were incorporated in our ordinary apparel after a while, without creating disturbance.

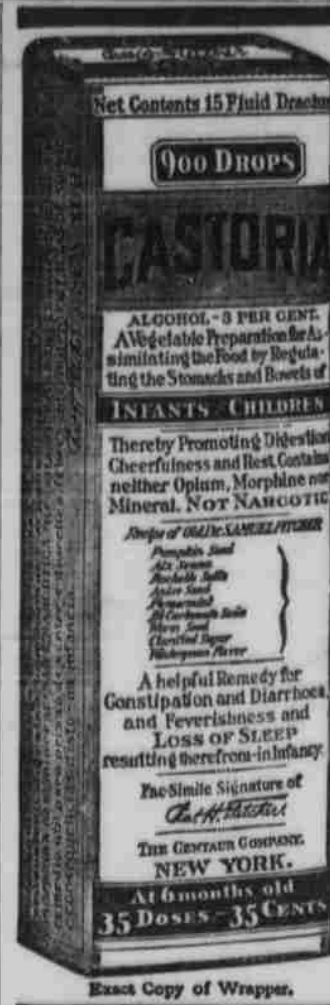

There is so little fullness in this new skirt that it does not seem to be even a first cousin to the skirt of Jenny with its tucked-up hem. That skirt, which pervaded the continent for two years, had a tendency to flare out, to fling itself away from the ankles; this skirt goes in so rapidly from knees to hem that it does not need to undergo the same treatment that was accorded the other skirt.

For instance, to be technical—the fullness at its hem is not caught up and gathered to a short, narrow lining. This is not considered necessary. It is merely turned under and run into the conventional hem, allowing its fullness, slight as it is, to fall against the shoe tops and accentuate the trousered effect.

This extreme skirt has brought about the narrowest silhouette we have had in years. When the hem is not tucked under, it is only wide enough to provide free movement in walking. The skirts are necessarily short, for their narrowness would greatly impede progress if they were long.
