From June 2-4, President Patricio Aylwin plans to visit Russia for a round of talks with top-level Russian officials, including President Boris Yeltsin. He will also meet with private investors and representatives of the banking sector. The two heads of state will sign a series of bilateral accords to increase trade and economic cooperation between both countries. In addition, they will approve joint cultural exchanges, bilateral efforts to combat drug trafficking, and a scientific accord for joint research in the Antarctic. According to Chilean officials, the visit is in response to President Yeltsin's expressed interest earlier this year in intensifying Russia's commercial relations with Latin American countries, especially Mexico, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, and Chile.
