What might have proved a serious fire and loss of property at the hotel Wednesday, was averted by the prompt action of Dr. Boggs, when some boys started a fire in some trash in the room under the stairway to the hotel. There are some boys who are in the habit of carrying matches, striking them promiscuously about, that is going to cause some one a loss of property if it is not stopped.

ONE OF THE GREAT KRUPP SIEGE GUNS

This is one of the immensely powerful siege guns made by the Krupp and used by the Germans to reduce the fortifications of the allies.

CORRESPONDENT WITH GERMAN ARMY DESCRIBES CONFLICT ON THE AISNE

By RAYMOND E. SWING, Correspondent of Chicago Daily News.

With Right Wing of the German Army in France—Five miles ahead are the trenches, 300 yards apart, where the British and German troops are taking their heroic parts in this bloodiest and hardest fought battle of modern times. Occasional explosions from big guns can be plainly heard.

I have just returned from an automobile ride which brought me near enough to the firing line to see shells exploding on the horizon. First there would be a great flash lighting up the evening sky, followed by a thunderous discharge. I was not allowed to drive nearer.

British Behind Rock Defenses.

The positions on both sides are excellent. The British troops at this point are mainly behind rock defenses, but the Germans have worked their way so close up that accurate fire on both sides means death to the soldier who carelessly protrudes his head. One of the diversions of the Germans is to put a cap on a rifle, hoist it above the trenches and draw the immediate and unerring fire of the opponents.

The soldiers in the trenches for days and nights have had a terrible experience. Recently they were lying in water under the exploding shrapnel and receiving food only at night, when black bread, wine and sometimes soup were passed to them under cover of the darkness. On the German side for many days the wounded lay in the trenches until night before they could be removed.

Now the weather has improved and conditions are better. About three miles behind the trenches artillery is stationed, dropping shells and shrapnel upon the trenches and the gun positions of the opponents.

Flashlights Reveal Foe.

My impression is that such fighting can continue unrelentingly and that here at least the Germans will perhaps only attempt to hold the lines while some other portion of the German army breaks through, either on the far right wing or at Verdun. The British troops made several attempts at night charges two nights ago. They left their trenches and advanced on the German positions, but the movement was suddenly revealed by a German flashlight, machine guns were quickly brought into position and an entire regiment of Englishmen was mowed down by the deadly fire.

For two days I have been a guest of the general commanding this corps, who has his quarters in a beautiful French chateau. It is ideally situated in large grounds, richly provided with game, which the staff officers have hunted these last few days during a slight pause in the fighting at the front. Before the castle are artificial lakes, the grounds giving the impression of a small Versailles.

Interested in U. S. Attitude.

I was welcomed warmly by the officers, all of whom were interested in learning the attitude of the United States. The impression prevailed among them that the American government had assumed a protectorate over German interests in China.

We dined together in the great salons, the walls of which were hung profusely with valuable oil paintings. The menu was none too diverse, but it was plentiful, with wines in abundance. I sat beside the city commandant, who told me of the situation in the city.

The castle itself is filled with costly treasures. There is an especially beautiful coin collection and there are also old engravings of priceless value.

The chateau was crowded with officers. I had lodgings in the library, sleeping on a mattress on the floor before a cheerful fireplace in a room the antique furniture of which would make any connoisseur envious.

In the front hall of the chateau is a telephone switchboard, where two soldiers sit with receivers at their ears, making notes of reports from the firing line.

Outside is a scene of ceaseless activity. Every moment automobiles drive up the wide roadways, officers dismount, answer the salutes of the orderlies, go inside, emerge again, hastily take their places in the automobiles and drive away quickly.

Horsemen in small detachments come and go and soldiers on bicycles or on foot are in constant circulation from early in the morning till late at night. One never forgets that this is one of the brain centers of the battle going on five miles ahead.

Tobacco Delights Fighters.

There was special delight over the arrival a short time ago of a dozen automobiles heavily laden with gifts for the soldiers, such as tobacco, newspapers, warm clothing, chocolate and little luxuries of all sorts. What delighted the soldiers most was the arrival of the tobacco, for the supply was long ago exhausted and cigars and cigarettes were unobtainable. Soldiers had been offering 25 cents apiece for cigars and were unable to get them. I had brought a considerable supply along, which I gave away. At first the soldiers helped themselves sparingly with unwilling politeness.

"Go ahead and take a lot," I said. With trembling hands they filled their pockets.

"For our comrades, too?" they asked.

"When my comrades see these," said one, "they will leap so high," indicating a jump high overhead. I have never before seen such joy as these soldiers displayed.

Great Cry for Newspapers.

The second great cry was for newspapers. All along the trip from Germany by automobile we were everywhere asked for newspapers, the soldiers crying out for them after the speeding car. This need is understandable, as the army at the front knows practically nothing of what is going on in the world.

Wherever we halted we were surrounded by men asking for news and we had the pleasure of telling many hundreds of soldiers the first information of the heroic deed of the German submarine U9, which sank three British cruisers.

One of the diversions at the front is shooting at French aeroplanes. For the first time since the beginning of the war I obtained reliable information about the activities of the French and British flyers. At this point the aeroplanes are particularly plentiful and one of these hostile machines flies every morning about eleven o'clock, so regularly that its pilot is called the "lunch flyer." When he appears he is greeted by the airship guns.

I had the unique experience of seeing a French flyer under fire. The first intimation that he was near was a loud explosion from a cannon near by. Far and high up in the sky I saw suddenly a round ball of white smoke where the shrapnel had exploded. Near by was the flyer looking like a black speck.

Flies Away Under Fire.

Another explosion, another white ball and the aeroplane close by. A third, fourth and fifth boom came, each followed by the appearance of a white ball of smoke, but each time the flyer was still there. After ten shots had been fired there was a row of great round clouds of smoke stretched half way across the sky with the black speck of the aeroplane in the lead, and gradually mounting higher, away from the dangerous fire.

In ten minutes $3,000 worth of explosives had been shot away without bringing down the air scout.

Special Shrapnel for Air Shots.

The shrapnel fired at flyers is constructed differently from ordinary shrapnel, and is timed to explode over the enemy and send down a shower of shot from above. These aeroplanes shrapnel send the shot straight ahead, and so probably every one of the shells I saw exploding sent some bullet through the wings of the aeroplane.

If one of these shots shatters the motors or wounds the flyer or the observer the shell has accomplished its purpose, for since the Germans have taken their position here no flyer of either army has been shot down, though practically no machine has returned from a reconnaissance trip without its wings being punctured.

Hate But Respect British.

Throughout the army wherever I talked with officers and men, I found bitter hatred for the English, but warm praise for their fighting capabilities.

Especially effective has been the English artillery, which the Germans say astonished them by its accuracy. One reason for this is that the region of France where we are has been used for maneuvers and the enemy knows the exact range. Nevertheless there is no sparing of praise for the good marksmanship. The English here have some naval guns which have done great damage.

English soldiers have also astonished the Germans by their powers of resistance and accurate rifle fire, but the Germans say that the English strength lies mostly in the defensive.

As such as the English are hated so much are the French respected. Everywhere the officers speak well of the French.

"They fight a gallant fight and observe the rules of war," say the Germans. "They are a worthy foe."

Aged Author Seeks Service.

Paris.—Denied a position in the French navy because of his age (sixty four years), Pierre Loti, the author who is a captain in the French naval reserve, asked to be joined to the marines serving as guards in Paris.

Reims, that a regiment of Prussian guards threw itself desperately upon the lines of the French cavalry.

Not once but five times did the devoted regiment hurl itself against the solid French front. After the fifth charge there were only a hundred men left surrounding their flag. With signs of reluctance they gave the signal of surrender, and it was then found that nearly all of the hundred were wounded.

In the course of this engagement the guards lost 3,000 men, it is stated

CHEERS FOR HINDUS DIVA CALLED A SPY

How Marseilles Greeted Dusky Troops From India.

Turbaned Warriors of the Orient March Like Princes in a Triumphant Parade.

By MALCOLM MACCASKILL, Special War Correspondent of the International News Service.

Marseilles.—This is to tell you, in the consort's good time, which will be when they are on the firing line, how Marseilles waited on the Indians, and how, in the end, they came.

When I left England I was assured they had then landed, and that I should reach here only after the last man of them had been hurried to the front, but a week after I arrived here we were still waiting and looking more eagerly every day to see "les Hindous" begin to pass.

We saw everything else. We saw "Tommys" and "Turcos" fraternizing with broad and broader grin; we saw "simple soldats" by the dozen score at the cafe tables along the Cours Bellune and down the Cannobiere; we saw the Senegaleses marching through the streets by the thousands; we saw British naval officers, magnificent in their physique, wearing the trim dark blue coat and brass buttoned white caps; we saw officers of the French navy; we saw dragoons with casque and cuirass, and dragoons in field uniform without either; we saw hussars in sky blue and hussars in the darker blue tunic of service; we saw officers of the line, and of the artillery with a red band running down their trousers; we saw all grades of French military medical men with the velvet in their caps that marks their state; we saw French sailors with red "toori"; we saw Italian volunteers setting off for Montelmar, playing the "Marseillaise" and the Italian national air.

At last one morning the Indians came.

It was not yet day when the first line came around. Reveille had not yet been sounded, but on two of the vessels, huddled together under awnings stretched to shelter the troops from the heat, were veritable forests of forms moving.

They came to the ships' sides and looked toward land. In the brown host we made out, above the turbans and the dark faces, a British flag.

The orderly transports passed in, taking their appointed places at the quays, where General Watkins received them and bade them welcome.

Then debarkation began. There were grizzled veterans, sturdy, square shouldered and tall and smooth-faced youths with the demeanor of princes. As they walked they appeared to be in a triumphal procession. Here on this turban a bunch of marguerites nodded, there a pink carnation bloomed, on this rifle fluttered a tri-color, and in that was stuck a bunch of flowers.

All along the line, as the smiling warriors came, they awoke salvos and cheers, and women in the balconies blew kisses and waved their handkerchiefs at them.

I called them smiling warriors, but that is not the word. Their faces were expanded in delight; their dark skin gleamed and their white teeth flashed.

The first line of the crowd could touch them as they passed, and dozens of people stretched forward to give "les Hindous" a good "poignee de main."

The Hindus, undaunted, gave a better "poignee de main" than they got. In the excitement they forgot their strength. Some of the giants shook hands, not wisely, but too well, and every here and there a citizen of Marseilles was seen looking at his limp hand wonderingly.

Miss Jennie Dufau Tells of Her Thrilling Experience.

Was Placed Against Wall to Be Shot After Living in Cellar During Saulxures Battle.

New York.—On the steamship Tomaso di Savoia there arrived Miss Jennie Dufau, grand opera star, daughter of Alfred Dufau, a linen merchant of Saulxures, Alsace, on the way to Chicago after one of the most thrilling experiences told by a refugee from the war zones.

Miss Dufau, who makes her home in Chicago, described her experiences at Saulxures, telling how she and her sister and father were accused of being spies and how she went out on the battlefield and gave succor to the wounded in a battle whose dead, she had heard, numbered 100,000.

August 6 the German artillery occupied the heights on one side of the valley overlooking the town Miss Dufau was visiting. August 12 the Germans occupied the town itself.

At that time there were only two French regiments near Saulxures—the One Hundred and Ninth regiment of foot and the Twelfth cavalry. The French, however, opened fire on the Germans, and Miss Dufau, with her father and sister, at once retreated to the cellar in an effort to escape flying shells.

"The French re-enforcements," she said, "were exceedingly slow in arriving, but they finally came and occupied the heights on the French side of the valley. Then began a tremendous artillery duel that lasted for days. All this time we were living in the cellar, where we were caring for ten wounded French officers.

"I often went out over the battlefield when the fire slackened and did what I could for the wounded.

"I received many mementoes from dying French soldiers and recorded their dying words. I saw dead soldiers holding crucifixes in their hands and even in their teeth—for some of them had an arm shot off and apparently had drawn their crucifixes from their pockets, placed the crosses between their lips and then reverently removed their caps.

"We improvised stretchers from gunny sacks stretched between poles and carried away as many of the wounded as we could to shelter.

"My brothers, Paul and Daniel, were drafted into the German army. Of course they had sworn an oath not to fire a shot at a Frenchman and their greatest hope was that they would be captured and permitted to put on the French uniform. You know the French soldiers in battle often say:

"They are firing in the air, they must be Alsations."

"Between August 12 and 24 the artillery duel raged, and finally the opposing armies came to a hand-to-hand fight with the bayonet. First it was the Germans who occupied the town, then the French. The Germans finally came to our house and accused my sister, my father and myself of being spies because they found a telephone there. The soldiers lined us up against the wall to shoot us, but we fell on our knees and begged them to spare the life of our father. They gave no heed till a German colonel came along and after questioning us ordered that we be set free.

"Soon after this the Germans were driven out, and then began a terrific battle, in which it was said not less than 100,000 were killed. The Germans seemed to be advancing, and after some trouble we managed to procure an ox-cart and get to Switzerland.

"I never will forget the scenes of that battlefield, with its wounded and dying under heaps of soldiers already dead."

3,000 GERMANS DIE IN FIVE FIERCE CHARGES

London.—Details are just available of the heroic attempt of Prussian guards to cut the railway connecting Reims and Verdun.

This attempt failed and the Germans were in danger of being caught between the French infantry and cavalry. It was at this moment, while the greater part of the German troops were retiring in the direction of

Sick Women Attention

Is it possible there is a woman in this country who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, which proves beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other one medicine in the world?

We have published in the newspapers of the United States more genuine testimonial letters than have ever been published in the interest of any other medicine for women—and every year we publish many new testimonials, all genuine and true. Here are three never before published:

From Mrs. S. T. Richmond, Providence, R. I.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—"For the benefit of women who suffer as I have done I wish to state what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I did some heavy lifting and the doctor said it caused a displacement. I have always been weak and I overworked after my baby was born and inflammation set in, then nervous prostration, from which I did not recover until I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The Compound is my best friend and when I hear of a woman with troubles like mine I try to induce her to take your medicine."—Mrs. S. T. RICHMOND, 199 Waldo Street, Providence, R. I.

A Minister's W'fe Writes:

CLOQUET, MINN.—"I have suffered very much with irregularities, pain and inflammation, but your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, has made me well and I can recommend the same to all that are troubled with these complaints."—Mrs. JENKINS AKERMAN, c/o Rev. K. AKERMAN, Cloquet, Minnesota.

From Mrs. J. D. Murdoch, Quincy, Mass.

SOUTH QUINCY, MASS.—"The doctor said that I had organic trouble and he doctored me for a long time and I did not get any relief. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised and I tried it and found relief before I had finished the first bottle. I continued taking it all through middle life and am now a strong, healthy woman and earn my own living."—Mrs. JANE D. MURDOCH, 25 Gordon St., South Quincy, Mass.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Most Improper.
"Miss Flibbit, the doctors say that if a self-conscious person will hold something it will help him to overcome that feeling."
"Perhaps the doctors are right, Mr. Flubbins, but I cannot permit you to overcome your self-consciousness by holding me, so please don't attempt it again."

In Love.
"I'm certain he loves me," said the suburban girl.
"How's that?"
"It is a four mile walk to town. He misses the last car about twice a week, but he still keeps coming."

Bound to Be.
"Pa, what is an extremist?"
"Any woman who dresses in style, son."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Love and the Wolf.
At a dinner in Tonopah Senator Key Pittman, apropos of a rash elopement on the part of two young constituents, shook his head and said:
"Love laughs at locksmiths. And later on, alas, my young friends will find the wolf doing the same thing."

Not What He Deserved.
"You deserve a great deal of credit, young man."
"Maybe I do, but I always have to pay cash."—Stray Stories.

Naturally.
"What caused that awkward break in the conversation?"
"Some one dropped the subject."

The Right Thing.
He—In what month were you born?
She—Oh, you needn't be afraid. The diamond is appropriate.

About the only thing in this life that a man can win in a walk is a game of golf.
