The graphic features a yellow background with the title 'Health Literacy in Practice' in large, bold, black letters. Below the title is an illustration of a doctor in a white coat and glasses, holding a tablet. To the left of the doctor are icons for a stethoscope, a human torso with internal organs, a smartphone, and a speech bubble containing an equals sign. To the right of the doctor is a large blue speech bubble with an equals sign. Below the illustration, the text reads: 'Join the Health Sciences Library & Informatics Center and Hospitals Health Literacy Office for a workshop. Find details & RSVP at goto.unm.edu/healthlit20'. At the bottom left is the UNM logo, and at the bottom right is the text 'Health Sciences Library and Informatics Center Hospitals Health Literacy Office'.

October is Health Literacy Month and the Health Sciences Library & Informatics Center and the Hospitals Health Literacy Office have joined forces to put together a workshop on the importance of health literacy in New Mexico.

Some questions about health literacy that are common are: Why is health literacy important? How can you incorporate it into your practice and improve communication with patients? This workshop will summarize what health literacy is and how it addresses health equity in New Mexico. We will include strategies you can incorporate into your day-to-day interactive practice and resources.

So join us on Tuesday, October 27th from 12-1 to celebrate Health Literacy Month by learning and growing with us! You can register for the workshop here.

If you have any questions please feel free to reach out to our Student Success and Engagement Librarian, Kelleen Maluski.
