The University of New Mexico Health Sciences Library and Informatics Center (UNM HSLIC) invites applications for a three-year research fellowship in Biomedical Informatics (BMI). The fellowship begins in July 2019 and comes with a stipend, health benefits and limited support for research project expenses. This fellowship also provides time and support for the fellow to complete a Master's Degree in Clinical Research, as well as a certificate program in BMI. Approximately a third of the fellow's time is allocated for performance of a mentored research project in BMI, culminating in submission of a manuscript to a peer-reviewed journal. The fellowship position also comes with a Visiting Instructor faculty appointment in the UNM HSLIC, through the UNM School of Medicine. This academic appointment enables the fellow to gain experience as a faculty member in a vibrant department in the UNM Health Sciences Center.
