Biomedical Informatics Seminar Series Presents Lizzy Young, MD, 11/15

by Sally Bowler-Hill on November 13th, 2018 | o Comments

Thursday, November 15, 2018, Lizzy Young, MD, Assistant Professor, UNM Department of Radiology, will speak on Ditching the Disk: The Effects of Cloud-Based Image Sharing on Department Efficiency and Report Turnaround Times in Mammography. Her Fellowship in Breast Radiology took place at the University of Utah Huntsman Cancer Institute as they were transitioning to a cloud-based image sharing system. This presentation will include a discussion on her research project, the results, and the broader topic of cloud-based image transfer.

The lecture will be held from 10 to 11 a.m. in room 228 at the Health Sciences Library and Informatics Center. Everyone is invited to attend. This lecture is part of the library's Biomedical Informatics Seminar Series (BioMISS). To see the full schedule, go to https://hslic.unm.edu/about-hslic/brochures/BioMISS_Schedule_2018-19.pdf. This event is free and open to everyone in the HSC community.
