BUY DIRT.

The advice given by the original John Jacob Astor to his son was of the most practical nature. He said—"Buy dirt, it won't run away." The Astors now have millions of dirt; indeed their own a very respectable slice of the earth. And very little of it has ever gotten away from them.

By the way, what's the matter with White Oaks' dirt? There is lots of it. The man who owns it is in luck; he who buys it is a wise man.

As sure as two and two make four, so sure it is that within a year I expect White Oaks will make antelope traps and take her position in the front rank of towns quickened from insignificance into importance through the breaking out of its latent forces and the spirit vested in it through the new blood infused. Croakers now have to take back seats—they can no longer sit on retailing unhealthy forebodings. Time, which is said to make all things even, has revealed its proposed line of march and with the clearness of electric light White Oaks can be seen basking in the sunshine of perpetual prosperity.

There are few of our readers who have not had some experience, who have not seen Chicago, Kansas City or Denver sprung from hamlets to important cities and the sites embracing them rise in value to more per foot than shortly before they were held per acre, say, per quarter section.

And yet, none of the cities we have named; nor all of them put together, had, in their infancy, the natural advantages and God-given resources that White Oaks has. Chicago was lifted up from a marsh; Kansas City was located on a mountain; Denver was and is on a plain, miles remote from her present source of mineral supplies and dependence. How different is White Oaks. Here we are nestled between mountains, with head, feet and hands fairly touching the beds of streams which Nature's chambermaid so invitingly spread here in the beginning, or through her forces provided at a later day.

Nor was it unusual that built up either of the cities cited. Each and all were originally located by men whose only capital was muscle, brains and heroic will power. But instead of each buying and taking a tangent of his own, they connected together, worked in unity and for a common purpose. As a result capital was attracted until they now have populations equal to many cities built earlier before this continent was discovered, now do more business than any of them, and there is less hunger, distress and all around
