What the Rain Did. Hon. Malaquias Martinez, territorial coal oil inspector and Republican boss of Taos county, as well as a successful rancher, before leaving for Taos county this morning said: "If we should get statehood this month, all New Mexico is certainly in gala attire for the event. Those who have traveled over the territory as our governor and other officials have expressed their pleasure and delight at the magnificent showing in fields and meadows, testifying to the wonders that can be wrought by rain fall in this great territory. Taos county in which I naturally take pride as a citizen and ranch owner, has been no exception. It is blossoming like the rose."

"Astounding as it may seem to relate, I have run across flowers this summer that I have not seen for twenty years. They are on the Rio Lucero and this only explanation that seems plausible is that they have come out through the great moisture, the lack of which has held them dormant for all these years. Their appearance is regarded as a propitious sign in this year and at this time when New Mexico seems so near to the threshold of statehood."

Mr. Martinez is jubilant over his own crops as well as those of the entire county in which he resides and he is preparing to send samples of

LONDON NOW FACES FAMINE

Mob Rule Prevails on Docks of the Largest City in the World

TONS OF PROVISIONS ROTTING

Calling Out of Troops Inevitable, as Police Cannot Cope With the Situation

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) London, Aug. 10.—The neighborhood of the docks was practically under mob rule today with the result that there was a such dwindling of food supplies that the metropolis experienced something akin to what might happen if a hostile foreign force should succeed in interrupting Great Britain's trade routes.

Unless good progress is made today in the negotiations looking to a settlement of the strike of the dock workers, the calling out of troops seems inevitable, as the police are unable to deal with the emergency.

The only quarter where relief was experienced was Billings Gate. There the striking fish porters obtained all they wished and returned to work today. On the other hand hundreds of railroad car men quit this morning and several stations were practically in a state of siege, strike pickets preventing by force all attempts to handle goods.

Gaunt Famine. It was the intention of the strikers to tie up all street traffic unless their demands were connected within a few hours. Should they be successful, London would be facing actual famine conditions. The traffic of motor traction today was hardly half its usual proportions. So short was the supply of petrol that hundreds of motor buses and taxicabs were unable to move a wheel.

The only traffic passing without fear of interference was that of vans carrying hospital stores. These were labelled with big red cross signs, with a permit from the strike committee, explaining that they must not be interfered with. Until this system of identification was adopted this morning, the hospitals felt a shortage of food and other supplies.

Tons of Provisions Rotting. Thousands of tons of fruit, vegetables and provisions are rotting on the wharves and the railway freight depots. Unless they can be moved soon they threaten to endanger the general health.

Today the temper of the strikers appeared ugly and scenes of violence increased. Those taking part in the conferences in the board of trade which is seeking a settlement, state that they are getting nearer a solution each time they meet and are determined to sit through tonight if there seems to be a possibility of reaching a settlement.

RETAIL LUMBER COMBINE INDIGNANTLY DENIES CHARGE

Allege That There Is No Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade and Justify Their Acts

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Denver, Colo., Aug. 10.—Branding as false and absurd the charge of "conspiracy in restraint of trade," as contained in the indictment recently returned by a federal grand jury in Chicago, fourteen secretaries and ex-secretaries of the retail lumber associations throughout the United States have issued a signed statement setting forth their position.

The lumber secretaries maintain they have a right to demand that wholesalers sell to them and refrain from entering into competition with them by selling direct to consumers. If they are to be restrained from protecting their retail interests, the lumbermen claim retailers in other lines should be brought under the same rule. The statement contends that every wholesaler and retailer have a right to establish his own rule of conduct in regard to business transactions, and cites a decision of the U. S. supreme court to substantiate its claim.

Among the signers of the statement is Louis L. Hellman, secretary of the Colorado-Wyoming Retail Lumber Association.

MRS. ORTIE M'MANIGAL REACHES SAN FRANCISCO

Remained Only Long Enough to Be Transferred From Station to Train for Chicago

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) San Francisco, Calif., Aug. 10.—Mrs. Ortie McManigal, wife of the prosecution's star witness in the Los Angeles dynamite cases, arrived here today from the south but remained only long enough to be transferred from the railway station to the ferry in order to take a train or Chicago. Mrs. McManigal was escorted from the depot to the ferry by local labor leaders.

OVERDUE REVENUE CUTTER FLIES QUARANTINE FLAG

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Charleston, S. C., Aug. 10.—The overdue revenue cutter Windom arrived off Morris Island just before noon, flying the quarantine flag, indicating more sickness aboard, the nature of which is not known at present.

WILL FIGHT TO LAST DITCH

Republicans Will Not Permit Congress to Override Presidential Veto

HOUSE CONCURS WITH SENATE

Flood Resolution Will Reach Taft This Evening or To-morrow

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The Flood resolution admitting Arizona and New Mexico to statehood passed its last legislative process today when the House agreed to the minor Senate amendments to the blue ballot portion of that measure. The bill now goes to President Taft, who it is said, will veto it.

Will Stand Pat. Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Stand-pat Republican leaders of the Senate and House flocked to the White House today to inform President Taft they would fight to the last ditch before they allowed either the Senate or House to pass any measure over the presidential veto.

"We do not propose to let any attempt at making the laws go through without a fight," said Republican Whip John Dwight. Senator Murray Crane of Massachusetts backed up this statement.

Friends Will Not Permit Taft's Humiliation

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—"This statehood matter," said Mr. Dwight, "is not political in itself, but the overriding of the President is intended to make politics against him and humiliate him before the country. Under these circumstances his friends inside and outside the party will rally to him."

Democrats Make It Party Matter. It was indicated today that not only were Republicans rallying to their forces, but the Democrats were using every means to gather into Washington all members of the House and Senate, to pass the Flood resolution over the president's veto.

Special to the New Mexican. President Against Little Blue Ballot. Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the Flood resolution on statehood, in reference to the manner of giving "little blue ballots" to the voters. It now goes to the President who will veto it. The fight will be to pass it in the Senate over his veto.

By prior arrangement, Delegate W. H. Andrews presented Jones, McCann, Kraft, Hand, Burkhardt, Mabry and other New Mexicans to the President in the east room after a reception to a Christian Endeavor delegation. The President said that New Mexico has a good constitution, better than the average of the states; that he had approved it with pride and pleasure. A. A. Jones and Summers Burkhardt presumed to inject that the House and Senate amendments (meaning the "little blue ballot") had improved the constitution. The President with clinched fist raised high said: "I do not believe it. I will not consent to a change after the people of New Mexico have adopted a good constitution by 18,000 majority. I will not humiliate them and compel them to vote again. I do not approve of the recall of the judiciary in the Arizona constitution. Good Day, Gentlemen. I have other appointments."

POPULAR EXCITEMENT WOULD RECALL IOLA JUDGE

He Insists That Mrs. Ella Reese Must Work Out Her Fine on the Rock Pile

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Iola, Kansas, Aug. 10.—"It was for the sake of the welfare of the boys of Iola that I decreed that Mrs. Ella Reese should go to the rock pile and I positively will not back down from that decree," declared Judge D. B. Smetzer of the Iola Municipal court today.

Mrs. Reese today remained in jail where Judge Smetzer declared, she should remain until she is willing to work out her fine on the streets with the men prisoners. "Although I may be powerless to force the commissioners to put the women to work, I shall not back down from the position I have taken. She will remain in jail."

Despite the many pleas that he do so, Judge Smetzer refused today to grant Mrs. Reese an appeal. The town is in a state of intense excitement. Some demand the court's resignation while others urge that he stand by his ruling. No effort was made to put Mrs. Reese to work today.

HENRY C. FRICK RESIGNS AS UNION PACIFIC DIRECTOR

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) New York, Aug. 10.—Henry C. Frick announced his resignation today from the board of directors of the Union Pacific railroad, in accordance with his decision to withdraw from all directorates except those of a few companies in which he is mostly heavily interested.

POPE'S CONDITION MUCH IMPROVED

However, He Had to Undergo an Operation to His Knee

AMERICAN BISHOPS NAMED

Keane to Be Archbishop at Dubuque and Schrempf Bishop of Toledo

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Rome, Aug. 10.—Dr. Patacci and Professor Marchisava visited Pope Pius early today and found his general condition improved. This was attributed to the removal of the patient from his small bed chamber to more spacious quarters, which, according to the Pontiff's own expression, affords him the feeling of being in the open air. The walls of the room are twenty feet high.

American Bishops Named. Despite his illness, his Holiness ratified the decision of the Consistorial Congregation presented by the secretary, Cardinal G. DeLa, appointing the right Rev. J. J. Keane, bishop of Cheyenne, as archbishop of Dubuque, and the right Rev. Joseph Schrempf, auxiliary bishop of Grand Rapids, to be bishop of the new diocese established at Toledo, Ohio, which has been detached from the diocese of Cleveland.

Operation May Be Necessary. Dr. Patacci and Marchisava held a consultation this afternoon with Dr. Amici. The possible necessity of a slight operation on the patient's knee to hasten relief was discussed, but the physicians finally decided. The Pontiff removed from his bed to a comfortable arm chair.

Both Cardinal Merry del Val and Monsignor Bisleti were permitted to visit his Holiness.

Pope Relieved By Operation. Rome, Aug. 10.—Under the direction of Doctors Marchisava and Patacci, Dr. Andrea Amici, who also is physician to the Vatican household, later in the day proceeded to puncture the Pope's swollen knee and succeeded in extracting a liquid of a serum character. The operation gave the patient much relief.

An Able Prelate

Cheyenne, Wyo., Aug. 10.—Bishop J. J. Keane, appointed archbishop of Dubuque, has resided in Cheyenne at the head of this diocese for eight years, during which, under his leadership, fourteen churches have been built in Wyoming. Cheyenne has him to thank for one of the most beautiful and costly cathedrals in the country. He is one of the most beloved and able men in ministry of the Catholic church in the country.

PERKINS CALLS DEMOCRATIC LIE

Panic of 1907 Was Not Instigated to Ruin Certain Banks

WITNESS CREATES A STIR

Corporations Cannot Continue to Exist Under Present Conditions

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—George W. Perkins, director of the U. S. steel corporation, testifying before the House steel investigating committee created a stir when he jumped to his feet and branded as false that the panic of 1907 had been started to ruin certain banks.

Representative Bartlett asked Mr. Perkins whether such was not the case and the New York financier was on his feet in a second, saying:

"Such a charge is absolutely false. There is not a scintilla of truth in it." The government's separation of the Standard Oil Company into 33 parts, Mr. Perkins declared, was certainly a warning to corporations.

He suggested that something should be done to relieve the present conditions under which, he contended, corporations could not continue to exist.

Perkins Excited. Washington, D. C., Representative Bartlett referred to the conspiracy charge that a group of bankers started the panic of 1907 to drive certain bankers out of business.

Mr. Perkins became excited. He jumped to his feet. Pounding the table vigorously with his fist, he said: "My dear judge, there never was a more infamous lie started than that. There is not a scintillation of truth in it. You might just as well say that

DEMOCRATS FEAR COTTON REVISION

They Object to Making It Unfinished Business in the Senate

BILL REPORTED ADVERSELY

Smoot Wants Prompt Action, but Overman Jumps Up to Head Him Off

TODAY IN CONGRESS.

Senate. Met at noon. Cotton tariff revision bill reported adversely to Senate but consideration postponed until another day.

LaFollette and Underwood again failed to agree on wool bill and decided to call in the other Senate and House conferees tomorrow to consider entire tariff situation.

The Senate took up the Cummins bill to require the National Monetary Commission to report next December. Senators Cummins and Heyburn attacked the Monetary Commission. Senator Burton defended it.

House.

Met at noon. Considered business under call of committee. George W. Perkins continued testimony before Steel Trust Investigating Committee.

Dr. F. E. Dunlap, assistant chemist of the Department of Agriculture, appeared before the committee investigating the Dr. Wiley case.

House agreed to Senate amendments to statehood bill. Adjourned at 1:35 p. m. out of respect to the memory of Representative Gordon of Tennessee.

Democratic Leader Underwood indicated that agreement was near on Free List Bill.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The House bill for the revision of the cotton schedule of the present tariff law was reported adversely to the Senate today from the finance committee.

Objection was made by Senator Overman of North Carolina, to Senator Smoot's request that the bill be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

Senator Smoot will repeat his request later.

Fail to Agree on Wool.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The sub-committee in charge of the wool tariff revision bill failed to reach an agreement today. All the conferees will meet tomorrow to again consider the entire tariff situation. Mr. Underwood's statement that a virtual agreement had been reached on the Free List bill and the calling of the full ways and means committee in special meeting this afternoon, was interpreted by many Democrats to mean that Mr. Underwood is ready to present a form of Free list agreement that can be quickly consummated with Senator LaFollette, provided the committee authorizes it.

Cummins Has a New Grievance.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The alleged "extravagance" of the National monetary commission was arraigned in the Senate today by Mr. Cummins of Iowa. "The commission," he charged, "has become a place for men who have lost favor with their constituents and have been defeated at the polls."

Burton Attacks National City Co. Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Senator Burton declared that in his opinion, the National City Bank of New York, for the reported purpose of holding bank stocks was contrary to law and not in accordance with the national welfare. If it were held to be legal, he said, he would introduce a bill to make such companies illegal.

Cutler, a wealthy merchant of Waterloo, Iowa, arrived here last night to institute an investigation and exhume the body.

Young Cutler died in a local hospital on May 8, following a mysterious episode on the Peak. Late the previous afternoon, Cutler staggered into the Half Way House and told a story of having been attacked and robbed. He was taken to a hospital and traces of acid poison found on his lips.

JUDGE MCFIE DENIES MOTION

A Telegraph Company Must Use "Due Diligence" in Delivering Messages

SEVERAL OTHER DECISIONS

Judge Drew Jury For Federal and Territorial District Court Terms

Judge John R. McFie overruled the motion of the defendant in the case of R. E. Johnston vs. the Western Union Telegraph Company for a new trial. The case is of great interest for the court found that the telegraph company was negligent in not delivering a message to Mr. Johnston who had left a new forwarding address at the telegraph office. The message was sent in care of the Claire Hotel and was delivered to that hotel and remained there long enough to lose Mr. Johnston a government job in Wyoming. Mr. Johnston brought suit for $500 damages and was awarded the sum of $187. The attorneys for the Western Union argued that the telegraph company had complied with the contract printed on the back of the message by delivering the message to the place where it was addressed. The court took a different view of the matter, evidently, and the jury brought in a verdict for Mr. Johnston.

The court was emphatic in the statement that the company must use due diligence in delivering a message when a person who expects to receive a message leaves an address with the agent of the telegraph company.

This decision no doubt will awaken keen interest among the traveling public, for they are peculiarly affected by the decision.

Judge McFie today overruled the motion to strike out a portion of the complaint of the Territory vs. the City of Santa Fe over the requirement of the city that the territory take out a building permit for the construction of a garage in the executive mansion grounds. The city has until tomorrow to answer the complaint which was drawn by the acting attorney general, Harry S. Clancy.

Judge McFie also gave a final decision in the case of Edgar Corkins et al vs. the Citizens Ditch et al involving $10,000 in San Juan county, the decision being in favor of the defendant. The court holds that the defendants paid the plaintiff in full for all labor performed.

Judge McFie also gave a final decision in the case of E. M. Hampton vs. Miss Lucinda Nichols et al involving a valuable ranch in San Juan county. Suit was to compel the specific performance of a contract entered into and the court decides that it was performed.

Drew Juries.

Judge John R. McFie, this forenoon, drew the juries for the federal as well as territorial district court terms which will convene at Santa Fe on the first Monday in September.

LOSS TO CARLETON HOTEL IS ESTIMATED $150,000.

Management Up to Last Moment Withheld Fact That Celebrated Actor Had Been Killed.

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) London, Eng., Aug. 10.—The loss to the American guests at the Carleton hotel, the two upper floors of which were damaged last evening by a spectacular fire that drove occupants of the place into the streets, is not so heavy as had been believed.

The loss to the hotel is estimated at $150,000 but this probably is an underestimate as all the ceilings and most of the furniture must be replaced.

The hotel management endeavored to belittle the fire and up to the last moment, withheld the fact that James Finney, the actor, had been burned to death.

The body of Mr. Finney will be cremated after the inquest and the ashes will be sent to the United States to be buried beside the grave of his mother who died last April. This is in fulfillment of a wish expressed by Mr. Finney a short time ago.

One of the features of the fire was the bravery of the Americans. What little panic and excitement existed was among the employes of the hotel, chiefly the continentals from the servants' quarters who were screaming at the top of their voices.

John Greenway, of Arizona, took two women and a boy down a fire escape, while R. W. Daniels slid down a rope to the street from the third floor with an English friend who was visiting him.

DRAWN TO DEATH BY HER HORSE.

Sixteen year old Beletia Brackett, daughter of William Brackett of Trinidad, Colorado, who was on her uncle's ranch in Colfax county, not far from Springer, met a terrible death yesterday afternoon while out horsebacking. Her horse threw her and her foot catching in the stirrup, she was dragged over rocks and through arroyos and mutilated by the horse's hoofs. When her uncle, Wade Brackett, reached her, she was dead.

LOWER FREIGHT FOR SANTA FE

All Inter-Rocky Mountain Points Benefitted by Formal Order

IN EFFECT ON NOVEMBER 15

Coast Points Are Favored Because of Water Competition

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Formal orders in the Pacific coast freight rate cases, supplementing the decisions rendered two weeks ago, were issued today by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Material reductions in both class and commodity freight rates are made from Atlantic coast points of origin to Inter-Rocky Mountain cities—Spokane, Wash.; Reno, Nev.; Phoenix, Ariz., and others similarly situated—although the carriers are permitted on account of water competition to exact rates somewhat less to Pacific coast terminals than to the intermediate points. The orders issued today define explicitly the rates indicated in the opinions as reasonable and require the carriers engaged in transcontinental traffic to establish the rates fixed by the commission on or before November 15, 1911. To insure an equitable and convenient disposition of all classes, which involve a construction of the long and short haul provision of the law, the commission divides the U. S. into five zones.

Five Zones. Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—The zones are described as follows: Zone 1: All territory lying west of a line called Line No. 1, which extends in a general southerly direction from a point immediately east of Grand Portage, Minn., southwesterly along the northwestern shore of Lake Superior, to a point immediately east of Superior, Wis., thence southerly to the intersection of Arkansas and Oklahoma state line; thence along the Kansas City Southern Railway to the Gulf of Mexico.

Zone 2: All territory lying west of line No. 1 and west of a line called Line No. 2, which begins at the Canadian boundary immediately west of Cookburn Island, in Lake Huron, passes westerly through the straits of Mackinac, southerly through Lake Michigan, to Paducah, Ky., thence southerly to the Gulf of Mexico.

Zone 3: All territory lying east of line No. 2, and north of a line extending from Norfolk, Va., to Paducah, Ky., and west of Line No. 3, from Buffalo, N. Y., to Wheeling, W. Va., and thence along the Ohio river to Huntington, W. Va.

Zone 4: All territory east of line No. 3, and north of the Norfolk Paducah line.

Zone 5: All territory lying south of the Norfolk-Paducah line and east of the Mobile and Ohio railroad known as the Southwestern territory. The railways are not permitted to exact higher commodity charges from points in a zone, to intermediate points, than to Pacific coast terminals. From points in Zone 2, permission is granted to charge commodity rates to points intermediate to Pacific terminals seven per cent higher than to the terminals. From Zone 3, fifteen per cent higher, and from Zone 4, twenty-five per cent higher. No order is made as to the rates from Zone 5.

The order in the Spokane rate case which affects the rates not only to Spokane, but to Walla Walla and La Grande, Baker City and Pendleton, Ore., follows precisely the principles and rates laid down in long and short haul order, the differentials of seven, fifteen and twenty-five per cent in favor of Pacific terminals being maintained.

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Denver, Colo., Aug. 10.—A thorough investigation is being made by federal agents of the alleged conspiracy of stockmen at Hugo, Colo., to oust John H. Hibbler from his homestead. In the complaint filed with Chief M. D. McEniry, it is charged, Hibbler was forced to sign away his rights while in a delirious condition and that his hand was guided by one of the alleged conspirators when Hibbler signed the release. Hibbler declared he had no knowledge of having signed the release.

WHEN HER BACK ACHES.

A Woman Finds All Her Energy and Ambition Slipping Away.

Santa Fe women know how the aches and pains that come when the kidneys fail make life a burden. Backache, hip pains, headaches, dizzy spells, distressing urinary troubles, all tell of sick kidneys and warn you of the stealthy approach of dropsy or Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. They attack kidney diseases by striking at the cause. Here's proof of it in a Santa Fe woman's words:

Mrs. Desideria J. de Quintana, College St., Santa Fe, N. Mex., says: "Several years ago I used Doan's Kidney Pills and I was cured of a bad attack of kidney complaint. At that time a statement appeared in the local papers, telling of my experience and all that was then said in their praise. I had pains in my back that made it difficult for me to stoop and there were other troubles which plainly showed that my kidneys were at fault. Soon after I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills, improvement was noticeable and the contents of two boxes, not only restored my kidneys to their normal condition but also removed the pain from my back. I glad to say that during the time that has since passed, my cure has been permanent."

HUNDRED YEARS OLD TO-DAY

Astoria Isn't in Same Class With Santa Fe, Historically, However

CELEBRATING ITS CENTENNIAL

Festivities That Will Continue One Month Open To Day in Ancient Town.

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican)
Astoria, Oregon, Aug. 10.—President Taft pressed an electric key in Washington today which sounded a gong in the stadium in this city announcing the formal opening of the celebration of the birth of Astoria, 100 years ago. The report of a huge bomb followed and before its echoes had died away, war vessels of the United States navy in the harbor and the guns at Fort Columbia, Canby and Stevens, followed with the presidential salute. John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American Union, spoke as the personal representative of the president.

A Great Celebration.
Astoria, Ore., Aug. 10.—The Astoria Centennial, a month's celebration of the founding of Astoria in 1811 by John Jacob Astor, opened here today with exercises appropriate to the historical event. The celebration has been given national recognition by the presence here of the Pacific Coast fleet of the torpedo boats and several other vessels of the United States navy and the participation in the event by the artillery from Fort Stevens and Fort Columbia. It is expected that several foreign warships will arrive here during the four weeks the centennial is to continue.

Astoria was crowded for the opening of the centennial. For several days people from all over Oregon and from the Pacific coast and the East have been arriving, and today twenty-five special trains brought additional thousands to the scene of the festivities. Governor West of Oregon and his official staff have been here for several days and Governor Hay of Washington, Governor Hawley of Idaho, Governor Eberhardt of Minnesota, Governor Tenor of Pennsylvania, and the mayors of several Pacific Coast cities are expected to be here during the celebration.

The formal opening of the centennial was preceded by a reception to distinguished visitors, and at noon an informal luncheon in honor of Governor West and other notables was given under a floral canopy of the roof of the principal hotel of the city. The swinging open of the gates of a replica of old Fort Astoria—Governor West was the signal to the waiting throngs that the centennial was inaugurated. This event was preceded by a civic and military parade which, headed by the Centennial band, started from Government Square. Following the band were 1,000 "jacksies" from the torpedo fleet and battery "A" of the Oregon National Guard, who acted as a guard of honor for Governor West and his staff. Next in line came the Astoria Centennial committee and prominent visiting state and municipal officials and the United Scandinavian Societies and other civic and fraternal organizations.

Arriving at the stockade around Fort Astoria the procession came to a halt and, after making a short address, Dr. H. L. Henderson, president of the Centennial committee handed to Governor West a big iron key with which the governor opened the lock, and the wide gates of the stockade swung open. This was the signal to a solitary soldier standing nearby, and he began a series of wigg-wag signals to Fort Columbia and a roar from the big cannon at that fort was followed by similar demonstrations from the batteries at Fort Stevens and Fort Canby. Simultaneously the warships in the harbor took up the firing and a salute of seventeen broadsides from the fleet added to the din which shook the city to its foundations.

Proceeding to the open air stadium Governor West and his staff and invited guests were greeted by a chorus of 1,500 voices singing "America." His delightful feature concluded, the Very Reverend Alexander Christie, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Oregon City, returned thanks for the blessings that have been bestowed on the Oregon Country in the century since the white man came. Following the invocation, Governor West spoke at length on a "Century of Astoria and Oregon," dwelling on the accomplishments of the white man in the Oregon country and reviewing the wonderful transformation which has occurred since Astor established his trading posts in this wilderness one hundred years ago.

Governor West was followed by several other speakers. At the conclusion of the speech-making, the entire gathering, led by the great chorus, brought the formal exercises of the day to an end by singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

The celebration will continue until September 9. The Centennial committee has arranged a long series of events, covering every day of the centennial period, for the entertainment of visitors, including sporting events on land and water, artillery practice by the huge 14-inch disappearing guns at Forts Columbia, Canby and Stevens, land maneuvers and sham battles by the national guard, aeroplane flights on land and water, maneuvering of the warships in the harbor and numerous marine carnival historical parades and pyrotechnical displays.

August 28 has been designated as "Astor Day." Special exercises and a floral parade on that day will precede the unveiling of a monument to John Jacob Astor.

An Old Town.

Astoria was settled in 1811 by an expedition financed by John Jacob Astor of New York. The expedition, unlike the expeditions sent into the far West and Northwest by the two great English fur trading companies, the Northwest Company and the Hudson's Bay Company, had as its co-ordinate purpose the colonization of the territory, not alone immediately surrounding the mouth of the Columbia River, but all the territory drained by the Columbia River and its tributaries. By a confusion of geographical facts, the Columbia and the Fraser River were presumed to be identical, hence the equally erroneous supposition that the Columbia drained the entire country from the California line north to a point 40 degrees north of the 54th parallel north latitude and east to the summit of the Stony (Rocky) Mountains. In after years, during the Oregon controversy, which gave rise to the slogan "Fifty-four forty or fight," though the existence of both rivers had been ascertained, the United States, because they were in Astor's time supposed identical, maintained its claim to the Fraser River country on the ground that Astor's colonization scheme included it as part of the supposed Columbia River watershed.

Astor was unwise in the selection of his associates in the venture, for the four partners who headed the expedition were subjects of Great Britain. Using this for an excuse, they sold out the post at Fort Astoria in 1813 to representatives of the Northwest Company, who brought the news of the outbreak of war between the United States and Great Britain in 1812.

Under the name Fort George, the fort established by Astor and known as Fort Astoria, remained under British rule for several years, until at the instigation of Astor, the United States, under a clause of the treaty of Ghent, in which both nations agreed to surrender all territory captured during the war of 1812, demanded the return of Fort Astoria.

England's representatives on the joint commission in London admitted the bona fide settlement of Astoria with the intent to colonize, and ceded sovereignty of the fort in 1818, but insisted upon recognition of the validity of the sale of the real property by Astor's partners to the Northwest Company. Astor was thus cheated out of his property, but the United States had secured practical recognition of a powerful argument for use in the permanent settlement of the Oregon controversy in 1846.

In that controversy, Great Britain, as the result of exploration and alleged bona fide settlement of Fort Vancouver in 1821, claimed the territory as far south as the present Oregon-Washington boundary, the London commission having tentatively fixed the boundary line along the 49th parallel only so far west as the Rocky Mountains.

Again the United States brought forth its argument that Astor's expedition intended, prior to 1821, to colonize the entire Columbia River watershed, and this argument, supported by discovery of the Columbia in 1792 by Captain Gray and exploration by Lewis and Clark in 1805, secured the acknowledgement of sovereignty to practically all the territory drained by the Columbia, save a considerable area in the Okanogan country.

The United States did not yield up the Fraser River watershed and the greater part of the Okanogan country gracefully. Polk, with many other eminent Americans, was convinced that our title was perfect as far north as 54 deg. 40 min., and he and the Democratic party made their campaign in 1844 on the famous slogan "Fifty-four forty or fight." The steps taken in line with this policy by Congress all but involved us in war with Great Britain, who flatly refused to consider any proposal for a boundary further north than the 49th parallel. The backdown of Congress, which was followed within a few weeks by the convention with England establishing that parallel as the permanent boundary, was termed "a disgraceful surrender."

The territory secured to the United States, however, was a vast one, comprising all of the present states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and parts of Montana and Wyoming.

The principal historical structure in connection with the Astoria Centennial celebration is a replica of the original Fort Astoria, which was a stockade enclosure, about 100 feet square, defended by four iron cannon. Within are reproductions of the log house in which Astor's expedition wintered in 1812, the "barn" in which the "peltries" were stored, the machine shop, the ammunition magazine and the store-house. The stockade is made of six-inch logs, ten feet high and sharpened at the top, with block houses at each of the four corners.

REGARDING BIG BUSINESS.

Henry J. Allen, editor of the Wichita Beacon, is making Chautauqua speeches this summer. His subject is "The Responsibility of Being a Plain Citizen." In his address at Holton, Kas., last Saturday Mr. Allen devoted a few minutes to a discussion of the relation of the people to big business. The Topeka Capitalist, in its report of the speech, said:

"One of the striking parts of the lecture is Mr. Allen's treatment of the well known habit which the citizen has formed of legislating virtue into his life. The lecture contains a vivid chapter on the 'unenforced statutes,' and the thought is advanced that the ceaseless multiplicity of our laws by which we seek to regulate every grievance has brought us into an alarming state of indifference touching obedience to laws on the statute book.

"He deals logically with the taste the citizen has for going after the public service corporation and the big things that serve him. 'The taste which the citizen has for eating these monstrous raw,' said he, 'has put nearly all our public prosecutors and law-makers to work bringing these delicacies into the political camp; public men become mere baiters and hunters, rather than tamers and preservers of the game reservations.'

"Many a bill introduced in the legislature is the result of somebody's personal grievance. The station agent, for instance gets out of bed wrong end on Monday morning and gives a sharp answer to the cow shipper or the fruit man about rates or train service. The cow shipper or fruit man is offended and proceeds to even up with the station agent by having a bill prepared to regulate the railroad. Meanwhile the president of the railroad is grieving because his station agent didn't have tact enough to get along with a patron, and because the patron did not have the forethought and the business judgment to write a letter to the station agent's superior about the grievance.

"We do not always take time to be just to big things. We have failed to realize that the tremendous growth of inventions which wiped out distance and brought the earth into a neighborhood have brought with it an era of big business without which we could not exist. We fail sometimes to realize the mutual profits in the millions the railroads are spending, and expend our energy trying to find out what the road's profit is. We fail to realize sometimes the justice of the big corporation's side of the case. We fail to give credit for the mutual interests of our interests; we fail to realize that we need the big corporation, as it needs the people, and there is room in the just and general order of things for benefit to both the common carriers and to those served.

"We who live in the west must admit that the railroads have done and are doing a great work in developing the country, and the progressive citizens will not hesitate to co-operate with them, for in so doing he benefits himself and his community. Take the efforts of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway company in that direction as an example of what the larger carriers are doing. It is impossible to estimate in dollars and cents the value of the work of so vast a system of railways with its thoroughly organized and fully equipped departments devoted to agricultural and live stock experiments, industrial enterprises, colonization prospects and the like. The people profit by the work, and as the people profit the railroad profits. It is the co-operation that counts.

"The remedy for all the troubles, real and imaginary, is in honest controversy, intelligent inspection and thoughtful study. I believe we have already passed the period of harangues where the cheap man can make a lasting impression by intemperate attacks upon the corporations. The people are becoming educated on the subject; they are learning to discriminate, and the reformer who comes to us now with his attacks upon big business must have an honest message. The big business man is also getting more discriminating. He is learning that there is such a thing as an honest reformer; that a man may oppose big corporations and not be a ruthless demagogue.

"Out of the clash of big, strenuous minds there is coming a more thoughtful period, a period of less loose talk on both sides of the battle; a period which finds the capitalist haggard and weary of the fight and making new resolutions for a better policy for the future; a period which finds the citizen ready to say, 'We wanted to show what we could do; now let us work together a bit.'

"The citizen has had his appetite for reprisal upon the big interests satisfied; he wants now a constructive policy; he wishes to build up some more. He has always had this way about him, and in spite of his building up and tearing down and building up again, he goes on like the awkward giant he is, stumbling upward, with his eyes fixed on some big goals. "He is often misled by clever demagogues on the one hand and keen defenders of interests on the other, but when he comes back sobered from the hunt he has had for the Great Red Dragon, he's ready again for the

THE RAVAGES OF CONSUMPTION.

"Deaths from Tuberculosis," is the gruesome title of a census bulletin issued by the federal census bureau yesterday and it tells of the frightful havoc caused by consumption in the five states of Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania. In 1910, more people died in those five states than live today in New Mexico, and of the deaths, 42,075, or more than ten per cent were due to tuberculosis, deaths that might have been prevented in most cases if the victims had come to New Mexico in good time. Maryland showed the highest percentage of deaths from tuberculosis, one of every eight persons in that state being doomed to die of tuberculosis. Pennsylvania, had the lowest percentage, one of every twelve Pennsylvanians being doomed to die the dreadful death of that dreadful disease. Among the colored population of Maryland, the death percentage from tuberculosis is enormously high, more than 17 per cent of all deaths being due to that cause. The statistics make the startling revelation that many of the deaths from tuberculosis are of children under five years of age, and that more than sixty per cent of the deaths occur in the prime of life, that is between the ages of 20 and 49 years. In the states named, excepting New York, the greatest number of deaths occur between the ages of 20 and 29, while in New York the greatest number is between 30 and 39 years.

Las Vegas had a death from typhoid the other day and now reports a case of smallpox. These are merely warnings to clean up and apply to Santa Fe as much as they do to the Meadow City. Where there is filth, there is illness. Of course, Santa Fe is much more fortunate than Las Vegas in its water supply, for Santa Fe has not a single human habitation on its water shed, while Las Vegas has villages and settlements all along the course of the Gallinas above its reservoirs and must therefore exercise much greater care than this city, but even here it pays to be on guard for typhoid and smallpox are the penalties that people must pay for being filthy, only that the innocent must suffer with and often for the guilty.

A writer in the Survey magazine gives pungent expression to a great fundamental truth when he says that "every social worker has learned that although sometimes the income is too small, more often he comes because the outgo is too large; because too many pennies roll away in the wake of wasted and discarded food materials, unneeded garments and needless luxuries." The same argument exactly applies to well paid wage workers and salaried men who do not as a rule in this generation get the maximum of enjoyment and benefit out of the money which passes through their hands. Waste is the supreme evil.

If the Democrats had been sincere about statehood for New Mexico, they would have passed in the House the simple statehood resolution introduced by Delegate W. H. Andrews. It would have had plain sailing in the Senate, President Taft would have signed it in a moment and New Mexico would by this time have a state election campaign that would be the hottest thing in the election line ever pulled off in the southwest. The Democratic interference spoiled it all and no Democrat can hereafter say honestly that his party or his leaders favored statehood, for they have done their best to postpone it and defeat it.

The murder of a defenseless woman by a young brute near Springer, the day before yesterday, was one of the most atrocious crimes in the history of New Mexico. Yet, there are some people and some newspapers, who would suppress the facts and not comment on them, because, forsooth, it might give the impression on the outside that New Mexico is lawless. But there is only one way to reduce the number of crimes of that nature, and that is by swift and severe punishment. To pass them over in silence is to condone them.

It isn't President Taft who has been put in a hole by the passage of the Flood resolution, but several gentlemen who answer to the name of A. A. Jones, H. B. Ferguson, J. D. Hand, et al. Incidentally, the people of New Mexico are in the hole with them which is an occasion neither for mirth nor levity, as the Albuquerque Herald very truthfully remarks.

Who killed Cock Robin?
I did it with my little hatchet says A. A. Jones.

I did it with my little gun claims H. B. Ferguson.

I did it with the big stick bawls J. D. Hand.

"We'll remember it," cry the people who must pay the funeral expenses.

Astoria, Oregon, a little town, smaller than Santa Fe, is kicking up high jinks for an entire month because it is a hundred years old today. Wonder how it would feel and what it would do if it were more than three hundred years old and for a thousand years prior to that had been some pumpkins as an Indian village?

The Nelson resolution was defeated in the Senate on Tuesday and the Flood resolution will reach the President on Friday. What more need be said?

TAFT ADMINISTRATION FAVORS UNION LABOR.

Eight Hour Day Must Be Given Workmen in Every Shipyard Having Federal Contract.

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) Washington, D. C., Aug. 10.—Organized labor won a signal victory today when Comptroller of the Treasury Tracewell construed the last naval appropriation act to mean that "every" employee in a ship yard where government vessels are building, must be given an eight hour day.

See America First.

Governor Mills has been notified that the Greater Baltimore committee has changed the date for holding the big "See America First" convention in Baltimore, Maryland, to May, 1912, instead of January as originally planned. The change in date will give the various states more time to arrange for the exhibit they intend making. It is proposed to make the display one of the greatest events that has ever taken place in this country. The proposition has been strongly endorsed by President Taft, who promises to be present on the opening day and will have all of the departments of the United States government, co-operate with the Baltimore people insofar as it is permissible under the law. Large committees have already been appointed by Governor Crothers on the part of Maryland, and Mayor Preston for Baltimore, City, and they are getting down to hard work, co-operatively with the Greater Baltimore committee, in making all the arrangements that will be necessary for such a big convention.

In changing the date for the convention, the members of the executive committee of the Greater Baltimore committee felt that as May is usually one of the most delightful months of the year, it would be a far better time for the display than in January when there is generally more disagreeable weather than at any other period. It was also realized that to have one of the greatest topographical and pictorial exhibits ever seen in this country, would call for a lot of careful planning and hard work. Therefore, it appeared to the committee that more time would be required to do the multitude of things necessary to perfect the arrangements for the convention, than between now and the latter part of next January. This was also a strong reason for making the change.

The Blue Book.

The "Blue Book" or Legislative Manual for 1911 has come from the presses of the New Mexican Printing Company and a few copies have already been distributed throughout the territory.

The book is issued by the authority of the territorial secretary, Hon. Nathan Jaffa and is of unusual interest this year because it contains the constitution adopted by the people of New Mexico and because it is likely the last book to be issued for the territory of New Mexico.

The book contains 325 pages and an index.

Opening it one finds a very attractive frontispiece, a tricolor half tone of the Capitol with flag flying from the cupola and the beautiful green trees looking delightfully fresh.

The manual contains pictures of Governor William J. Mills, Territorial Secretary Jaffa and Delegate in Congress William H. Andrews, also smaller pictures of the judges of the territorial supreme court with Chief Justice William H. Pope's portrait in the center of the group and two pages of portraits of territorial officials. All of the half tones are exceedingly clear and good.

The book is made up of the following parts:

Part one, New Mexico, its history, manner of government, the enabling act, the constitution. Part two, official register. Part three, election statistics. Part four, national and state governments, containing among other things qualifications for voting in each state, and sketch of history of the states and territories. Part five, official record, telling of governors under Spanish, Mexican and American rule; territorial, federal and judicial officials; the delegates in congress, etc.

Part six gives the names of the post-offices of New Mexico and census statistics; national forests, and lands granted by the United States.

Part seven, corporation statistics, and notaries public by counties and commissioners of Santa Fe.

Part eight, chronological data from 1825 to 1911. Then follows a very handy index.

A Splendid Work.

It is the most complete, the most exact, the most voluminous, the best compiled and the best edited work of its kind produced in New Mexico and reflects great credit on the territorial secretary, Hon. Nathan Jaffa who directed the work and on Assistant Territorial Secretary Edwin F. Coard who looked after many of its details. The printing of the book has also been favorably commented on and shows the New Mexican printing and binding department can hold its own in turning out first class work with any in the country.

STOCK MARKET WEAK. LIQUIDATION CONTINUES.

Unfavorable Crop Conditions and Political Uncertainty Are Disturbing Business.

(By Special Leased Wire to New Mexican) New York, Aug. 10.—The unfavorable crop report was one of the many reasons advanced in explanation of the market's weakness. In the first hour, offerings exceeded 400,000 shares, an average of 2,000,000 for the session. Trade fell off slightly in the second hour, but at further cost to values, the list crumbling all around.

The ease with which standard stocks fell was accepted as sure proof of a continuance of a liquidating movement.

One point rallies were registered at midday by the Union Pacific, St. Paul Atchafson, Reading and Canadian Pacific, but the tone of the market was not reassuring.

Bonds were heavy.

New York, Aug. 10.—Further covering of short contracts and a fair show of buying, imparted a firm undertone to the list with especial strength in U. S. steel, the Hill stocks, Reading, Lehigh Valley, St. Paul, Southern Pacific, Canadian Pacific and Amalgamated Copper.

The Brute and the Man

By GEORGE CARLING

When James Schofield, farmer and dairyman, drove home from Denton's Corners that night, he was unquestionably drunk. Hilarious and musical when he left his companions at the village tavern, he became after the first mile tearfully sentimental; muttering much to himself about a certain comrade of his boyhood days, long since deceased.

During the third and last mile, his hungry and eager horse had plunged recklessly over the muddy, uneven road, and Mr. Schofield, after extricating himself several times from among the milk cans in the wagon, had become pugnacious and aggressive.

When he reached his door yard he was fighting drunk. With many curses and kicks he had ushered his unlucky horse into its stall; had cursed his wife for the door held readily open for him; had ordered her to pull off his boots, and had sworn with vigor and originality at the supper which had been held in readiness for five hours.

Finally, exasperated at finding no available fighting material, he had struck the little woman a cruelly savage blow—felling her to the floor—and had answered her one piteous moan with a comprehensive, though somewhat incoherent, lecture on the duties of a wife and her obligations to love, honor and obey.

Then he stumbled into the side bedroom and flung himself down without wasting any precious moments in disrobing. Five minutes later his heavy breathing indicated his perfect oblivion of all matrimonial trials.

The girl (she was scarcely more) raised her head. There were no tears, nor sobs, but there was a tiny stream of blood trickling from a cruel cut in her cheek and a little pool on the floor where she had lain.

She raised herself wearily to her feet, and staggering to a chair buried her face in her apron—and so sat, thinking—motionless and silent.

Presently she arose—took the lamp from the table, and stepping to the looking glass by the window, examined her wounded face.

Three years before, no sweeter, daintier face—no more bewitchingly gentle eyes—no merrier dimples around such a smiling mouth—had been reflected from any mirror in the township. Even an hour before one would have had to search far for its equal—the pathos of suffering, of untold anguish, had as yet but changed the quality of its prettiness.

At this instant, however, she, herself, was startled at the reflection. She had never seen that face before!—those hard, set, resentful eyes—those tightly compressed lips—that resolute mouth. She had never seen these, although two or three times before she had looked upon a grievously scarred face. But she remembered now, almost with a little wonderment, that she had already decided how she should meet this next assault when it came. She had dismissed, with a bitter laugh—almost a sneer—the thought of appealing to the law—that abortive, rusty engine of justice and correction, which finds a drunken slugger and then sends him back to his wife, to exact bitter reproof for her complaint.

No! her remedy was to be more effective and lasting; bringing comfort and safety to herself and fair punishment to the brute.

Lighting a lantern she went to the stable, hearing, as she expected, the eager whinnying of the unfed horse. She threw the welcome oats into the manger, speaking a few caressing words as she rubbed a rough cloth over the grateful animal's wet back. Then climbing to the loft she threw down a liberal supply of hay—leaned her cheek against his for a moment, and went back to the house, picking up at the wood pile a heavy hatchet.

Cautiously entering the room where the brute lay in his drunken stupor, she put on a dark, serviceable dress—her best—collected a small quantity of extra clothing and some little trinkets, bringing them into the kitchen, where she packed them into a rusty traveling bag.

Outside, a steady, drizzling rain was falling, and she thought of the miles of muddy road before her. Packing her shoes in the bag, she pulled on a pair of rubber boots—knee-high and confidence-inspiring.

Then she smeared the hatchet with blood from the pool on the floor, and clipping off a few ends of her bright brown hair she sprinkled them on the tool. Next she rolled up her blood-stained apron into a tight bundle, and again taking the lantern went out and threw the hatchet into a thicket of brush near by. The apron she stuffed behind a beam in the woodhouse.

Re-entering the kitchen she picked up her bag, turned out the light, and then—paused. Once more, by the light of the lantern, she went into the bedroom, and after some little search emerged again with a well-worn wallet.

She counted the contents onto the table and stood, considering. There were $74 and some odd cents; the result of a collection of monthly milk bills.

Still she hesitated. For three years, since the brute had taken to drinking, she had toiled hard and had earned in honest work fully one-half of what had come in—but no money had been given her.

She counted the money into two equal piles—placed one of these back in the wallet—and taking the other, she stepped out into the night.

Wearied almost to exhaustion, she climbed into the early mail train at Bursbro, and in two hours she was in Buffalo. Then on again, without a break, to Cleveland. In two days she had answered an advertisement and secured employment as servant to a suburban family.

It was late when the brute awoke and struggled to his feet, cursing his wife for not having called him. He stumbled out into the kitchen and noted, with rising rage, the disorder of the night before—the upturned chair—the overturned lamp—the red stain in the floor.

"Gone to those d—d Watson's again!" he growled viciously, as he remembered her refuge on previous similar occasions. "I'll teach her afore night, cuss her!"

But before night, Mr. Schofield was under arrest, and in Bursbro jail, on a charge of murdering his wife. Her disappearance and his known abuse of her led to quick suspicion, and a search of the premises easily revealed the blood-stained floor and apron, and the damning hatchet. In time, the grand jury sustained the charge and he was held for trial at the next session—to be held two or three months later.

An exhaustive search for the body of his wife revealed nothing. With the sharper instinct of woman, she had evaded detection as effectively as the most experienced criminal could have done.

So the brute, in the seclusion of his cell, sobbed off. As his mind cleared and his hot blood cooled, perhaps his thoughts ran more on his wife's fate than on his own jeopardy. In his dreams and in his waking moments, he felt an ever-increasing dread of hearing of her—fearing the worst.

He grew strangely apathetic about himself, and when, a week before his trial, word was brought to him that he was a free man—that his wife had made known her existence and whereabouts, he walked from the jail without comment—to his farm and picked up the thread of his life, alone and soon unnoticed.

Over in Cleveland the suburban family were congratulating themselves on the cheerful, never-failing industry—the quiet, thoughtful dependability of their servant. Often they wondered at the tincture of sadness which seemed to overshadow her; and won by their sympathetic kindness, she had told her story.

Then came sickness—severe, but not lasting—and after that a letter from Kitty, her bosom friend. With what delight she tore it open! How hungry she was for news from her old friends and neighbors—perhaps also, she was hungry for news of him.

The Reason

By T. BLAIR EATON

"You needn't read any longer, Margaret," said Benson. "Somehow I'm not in the mood for it."

The girl closed the book very softly and turned slowly to look at the white face on the couch.

"You are tired, Ned?" she asked. "No," said he, with a wry smile, "not tired, but querulous and rather peevish, I'm afraid. I used to think, at the first of it that I had some pluck; but I'm rapidly being disillusioned. I haven't the nerve of a chicken."

"Oh, haven't you, you splendid boy?" she said. "I would like to know who but you would have lain here as bravely and uncomplainingly and faced the things you have the past year?"

"There are thousands of people who would have done it much better than I," said he gloomily. "The thing is getting on my nerve. Good Lord, I can't stand it! I can't! I can't!"

She moved her chair closer to the couch. Her face suddenly paled with tenderness and pity. "Ted, hush!" she said soothingly. "You mustn't talk like that. Think of your splendid courage all these long, long months since the accident. And every month puts you so much nearer recovery."

His eyes were turned away. She saw his fingers working nervously. "That's the rub," he confessed. "What is?" she asked quickly. "The chance of getting better—the chance of ever being of any use in the world again," said he. "Gordon told me this morning very frankly that it was a question whether or not I would ever walk again. I wish he had told me that in the first place, instead of carrying me along like this with ill-conceived kindness of false hopes."

The girl's face grew paler. "He told you then?" she asked. "Yes," he said. "I had the right to know. He was perfectly correct there, too. Only, as I say, he should have told me in the first place, if he had any doubts about it."

"Why?" said she. "Oh, for many reasons," said he. "Things would have been utterly different. I could have stood it better, I believe, if I had known it then."

"But it isn't at all certain you are going to be helpless permanently," she declared. "Gordon is simply telling you that to warn you in case the worst happens—and the worst is not going to happen," she ended cheerfully.

"As to that we can only make surmises," said he. "Time alone will settle the question, and from what Gordon said and the way he said it, I am rather inclined to the opinion that it won't do to have too many hopes."

The girl said nothing. She was looking out the window at the first green leaves on the trees and her eyes were dim with tears. Benson, too, was looking at the leaves. His face was stern and set and about his mouth were hard lines of stubborn determination.

"And so," said he, quite as if their talk had not been broken by the little period of silence, "I want to be very frank with you, Margaret. Let's not have any foolishness or any quixotic business about this affair. I was thrown from the horse and very apparently I am in this fix for the rest of my life. Well and good! I was very childish just now to cry out so against it. What is done is done and cannot be helped now. But that needn't necessarily upset the whole universe."

She looked at him questioning. She had never heard him talk like this before. He had always been a cheerful, hopeful nature, even after the bitter accident had left him to spend his tedious, endless day on the couch. "First," said he, "give me the ring, please."

The girl merely looked at him in unbelief. "Give me the ring, Margaret," he repeated sternly.

Slowly she drew the diamond from her finger and laid it in his outstretched hand. He put it in the pocket of his smoking coat and the lines about his mouth grew more tense. "Now," said he, "you are free. This matter of a woman tying herself to a crippled man has been tried before! It is all nonsense. It doesn't work—except in theories and sentimental fiction. You are not to come here again—not while things are as uncertain as they are at present, at any rate. You are to forget me—forget me, do you understand?"

The girl pressed her hand to her white cheeks. "Ted," she said incredulously, "what are you saying? What does all this mean? Are you trying to test me? If you are, it is most ill-timed."

"You—don't know very well I would never break it off, no matter what had happened. You are slandering me—insulting me."

His face twisted for a moment. Then he smiled grimly. "I am doing nothing of the sort," he declared. "I am simply talking good, common, every-day horse sense. It is better so. Can't you understand me?"

"No, I can't," she said brokenly. "Then let me make it plainer," said he. "I wish it. I suppose I am not very noble about it—but a man in my condition isn't supposed to be noble, or if he is expected to be he falls far short of the mark. I wish it. Do you realize all that means?"

She shook her head. Her eyes were dimming. She dared not trust herself to speak. "It means," he went on, "that we are not suited to each other—not now in the old days it was different, but we have to face new conditions now. I am exacting, peevish, broken. I shall probably be so for the rest of my life. I have got to face the future coldly, calmly. In that future you won't fit. You are too sympathetic, too solicitous, too sensitive. You make me aware every hour of the day that I am a crippled wreck, and if I am never better it will be like that through all the future—a future, frankly, I don't dare face—with you. Have I made it all plain now?"

The girl's face was buried in her hands. She was shaken with sobs. She could not see the worn, pitiful expression of Benson's own face. "Of course, all this is very hard for you to listen to, and very hard for me to say. Still, I think it is far better to say it now than to go on making some horrible mistake and finding it out when it is too late to remedy it."

There was a long silence, broken only by the girl's sobs. Benson's face was turned toward the wall. He did not dare to look at her. "You will forget me in time," said he. "You will marry some other and better man, and I shall, mayhap, marry some woman who is fitted to my peculiar position in life. There are such women I thoroughly believe."

Again the silence. At last the girl slowly arose. Her eyes were red and her shoulders shook convulsively. "If you wish it, of course," she said and turned away.

Benson bit his lips. His face was gray and drawn. "Goodbye," he said shortly.

The girl was looking at him closely. Suddenly she dropped on her knees beside the couch and burying her face on his shoulder wept without restraint. "Ted," she cried in a choking voice, "you were lying, lying. Tell me it is so. Tell me that you were lying—for my sake. I can't bear it!"

She felt his hand on her shoulder. Then she heard his voice, strangely shaken. "Yes, it was a lie, Margaret, a ghastly lie. I thought I was strong enough to carry it through for your sake. But I'm not. Here is the ring. Put it on again, dearie."

A Lummi Potlatch. In commemoration of a great victory achieved over the northern Indians ninety years ago the Lummi Indians on the Lummi reservation, five miles from Bellingham, gave a potlatch to about one thousand persons from this city, according to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. About a ton of clams was baked in the open under a huge bonfire, and an equal amount of spring salmon, cooked Indian style, on sticks stuck over the blaze, was distributed. During the afternoon a dozen of the Lummi dressed in historic costume dashed out of the woods on their ponies and after a mock attack upon the settlement quieted down to a game of "ala-bol." This is the ancient gambling game of the Pacific coast Indians, and is played with marked and unmarked pieces of decorated bone, which are passed from hand to hand, the object of the game being to guess in which hand the marked bone is held. Before the potlatch was concluded, Washington, son of old Chief Washington, mounted a stump and recited the epic narrative of the prowess of the warriors of his tribe. Each guest was presented upon his arrival with a silk ribbon upon which was printed, "Eyas Summa" ("Have a good time").

How Some Sermons Are Made. A few days ago, under the shelter of the trees of a manse garden, half a score of ministers told each other "How they made their sermons." It was an illuminating time. The "father" who led the conversation had many good things to say. At the end of thirty-six years of ministry, on account of his eyesight, he said he had not written fifty sermons. Every sermon was thought out, repeated to the "mistress of the manse" on Saturday afternoon and evening, and after that wise critic had made her observations and suggestions, preached without notes. Most of the preachers said they preached without a MS. Some had brief, others more extensive notes. Every man had a high ideal. None felt that he had already attained the excellence he desired.—British Congregationalist.

Being Merely Human. "Mamma, hasn't papa made enough money to retire from business?" "Yes, dear; that's why he doesn't retire."

Drawing Distinctions. "Is it hard to stem a current?" "That depends on whether you're trying to check a torrent or dock a small craft."

EARNING HIS WAY THROUGH LIFE. "How does it happen, Willie?" asked the boy's teacher, "that you always have so much money?" "I earn it," "You earn it? How?" "By taking medicine. Pa paid me 50 cents for taking a bottle of some kind of oil with a baby taste, and ma gave me a quarter for taking a bottle of something with iron in it, and I'm tryin' to get grandpa to give me a dollar for taking a quinine pill every night for a month. If I can't get her to make the bargain I'm goin' to let pa give me a dime a day for takin' malt or some thin'."

Peculiar Record of Trio

Chance, Jennings and Welch Often Hit by Pitched Ball—Unable to Dodge Coming Sphere.

Frank Chance, the leader of the Cubs, was overcome by heat the other day and the physician in charge says he cannot play ball again this year. This is a severe blow to the Cubs.

Chance is one of the unluckiest players in the league. He is one of the three men who stood out above all others when it came to being hit by pitched balls. The other two are Hughie Jennings and Curtis Welch.

The strangest thing of all, as far as two of these men were concerned, was the fact that they didn't mean it. They were game all right, but not game enough to voluntarily run the risks they seemed to take, and the countless bruises they received were not endured to help their teams, but because they couldn't dodge. It's a fact—Hugh Jennings could not dodge a ball, and Frank Chance cannot duck one now. As for Curtis Welch, he was a different proposition. He got hit intentionally time after time, and never, perhaps, without full meaning.

The box scores of the old Baltimore games seldom went into print without the words, "Hit by pitched ball, Jennings." Time after time Hughie was cannonaded, and as a rule, was bumped hard. His nerve and gameness were widely praised, while some of the critics said he was simply foolhardy. The latter opinion was almost universal when, after Baltimore had safely won the flag, Hughie continued to get thumped, and to get hit as well. All these years he had been unable to dodge. He seemed unable to convey the sense of danger from his brain to his limbs quickly enough to spring aside, and on several occasions he was knocked cold when he knew the ball was coming, when he was eager to get out of the way, and simply couldn't make his muscles move in time.

Frank Chance has been hit in the head 38 times, and stunned on 30 occasions, while he has received innumerable smashes on shoulders, ribs or legs. Chance wants to get out of the way, but can't. He stands flat-footed, resting heavily on his pins when batting, almost imbedding them in the ground, and he cannot sidestep or make his feet move in time to save him. He can't even dodge a slow ball, his feet move so rebelliously, and yet, once on bases, he is a lightning runner. Curtis Welch stood lightly set upon his feet and could swing away from the fastest pitching if he desired. But he didn't desire, and so agile, so snake-like was he that he could seem to be grazed by purest accident every time. He even developed a way of glancing the ball off his forearm, apparently dodging, yet leaving the arm exposed and letting the ball tick against it.

Why Mackmen Want Flag. It is hardly a state secret, but it is a fact, that the Athletics are furiously eager to win the championship this year in the American league, for they believe that the Giants are probable winners of the National league championship, and they wish to play them again for the world's championship.

Contrary, but Judicious. "What is Smarton's standing on this question?" "Where he can get in the running."

Pleasant for Father. "It doesn't matter if you are poor," said the dear girl, "we can manage to get along some way. After we are married I can learn to cook."

"Suppose," suggested the prudent young man, "that you learn the cooking stunt before we face the parson—then your father will have the pleasure of supplying the raw material for the experiments."
