Civilization Has Its Great Underworld and the Happy and Good Should Know About It.

Republican headquarters in this city had been the historic "Amen Corner" hotel on the historic "Amen Corner" in no more. Far upwards thirty years these old rooms had been the meeting place of political nabobs from all parts of the state and it was in these rooms that famous campaigns were planned, launched and fought on. It was here that Nathan Bush, Governor of the state, C. Platt, Brookfield, and other veterans met and discussed with the politicians. The edict that abolished the old landmark was recently issued by Timothy L. Woodruff, chairman of the republican state committee, who removed headquarters to No. 12 E. Third street, a slant on old politics and a slant on the local scene. The old headquarters, that, new time, new methods, new faces, now faces, now the famous "Amen Corner"

Social Season Does Not Usually
Begin Till Thanksgiving Day
Ushers It Into Active Life.

By Christine Wealand.
Special Correspondence.

Washington, Oct. 12.—With the return of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt to the White House early last week, Washington may be said to have shaken off its summer slumber and a new season of its life is beginning, even though the formal duties and pleasures of the socially inclined do not begin much before the assembling of congress, or at least before Thanksgiving Day, which has long been an opening date for polite society in Washington.

Mrs. Roosevelt, like most exalted housewives, is not without trouble in her annual homecoming and begins the season with a small army of mechanics still at work in the executive mansion where the rainy summer has wrought not a little damage to roofs, plaster and wall paper, just as in an ordinary ten-room dwelling. The state apartments have all been renovated without any change in the general appearance of the always beautiful old room, where the marriage of Miss Roosevelt and Representative Longworth took place last winter, the blue room, where the president and wife receive on all formal occasions, and the Green and Red parlors, which serve the purpose of ordinary drawing-rooms to the president's family.

Mrs. Roosevelt returns greatly improved in health by her quiet summer at Oyster Bay, and will be fully able to join with the president in the informal and graceful hospitality which they have practiced so continuously since their first coming to the White House.

The absence of Mrs. Longworth from the home circle will, of course, make an appreciable difference in the White House where, from her debut to her marriage, Alice Roosevelt reigned one of the really great belles in American history. Miss Ethel Roosevelt, the only remaining daughter of the president, is just fifteen, and notwithstanding the occasional use of her name on the top line of the delectable roll, she returned to school on Monday. Miss Ethel, who possesses many of the attractive qualities of her mother, and the same marked resemblance to her father, is not likely to be reckoned upon in any social happening more than a birthday party. She is, however, a girl of unusual promise, and all too small class of mothers holding the old-fashioned idea that a fifteen-year-old girl should find her chief interest in life in her books and her hobbies.

The Vice President and Mrs. Fairbanks, who live at 18 K street, opposite Fairmont Square, was seen only to the White House last season in the number and brilliancy of its entertainments, unless called to Washington by an extra session of congress, will pass the next six weeks at their residence in Washington. The cabinet members already in the Washington homes with the exception of the secretary of the treasury and Mrs. Shaw, who are in Iowa.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Root are now occupying their sixth Washington residence, having just taken the large house on Rhode Island avenue owned by former Vice President Levi P. Morton, but more recently occupied by the former Russian ambassador Count Cassini, and under the reign of his daughter, the brilliant Countess Marguerite, the merriest house in Washington. Since the Cassini occupancy, the house has been completely refurbished, so that Mrs. Root will be the mistress of practically a new home, a luxury she heretofore has not enjoyed in Washington, although the house she had last year on Eleventh street had been put in excellent order by its owner, Hon. Bourke Cockran, whose lifeline portrait over the drawing room mantel lent rather an unusual air to the conservative atmosphere of the Root home. In fact, Mrs. Root has been overwhelmed by family portraits in most of her Washington houses, the first residence she occupied, when her husband was secretary of war, being that of Mrs. Albert Clifford Barney, known in the art world as Alice Barney, one of the greatest amateur artists of America, a portrait painter of national fame, who has painted fifteen pictures of herself and daughters about her artistic rooms. Later on, the secretary and Mrs. Root moved to the residence of Paymaster General and Mrs. Bates, where Bates portraits were not so much in evidence, only to finish their first cabinet residence in another ready-furnished house on Lafayette Square, where the ancestors and descendants of the owner lined the walls of all the living rooms.

The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Shaw do not expect to leave their home this winter, but will remain for as much of the season as they spend in town at the Arlington hotel. The Secretary of War and Mrs. Taft, the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Hildreth, and Attorney General Clegg are all close to each other on the fashionable part of K street, near the vice president's, while the Postmaster General and Mrs. Cortright and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Mrs. McMillan are living far to the northwest, one on Bancroft place, the other on New Hampshire avenue.

Few of the foreign embassies and legations will be opened in Washington before November 1, most of the envoys, of whatever rank, preferring to remain in their summer quarters or take trips abroad before resuming their confidential and arduous, if not arduous, duties with the White House.

or the state department. The season proper for the diplomats does not begin until January 1, with the annual New Year reception at the White House, when all those representatives of foreign monarchies and republics and states come to the capital, presenting the most brilliant spectacle seen in Washington in the entire season.

Thirty-seven nations now maintain diplomatic relations with the United States, nine of them supporting embassies, which differ from the more general legations in the rank of their chiefs, an ambassador being the personal representative of his sovereign or president, while a minister at the head of a legation is the representative only of the nation by which he is accredited and not that nation's ruler. Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia and Italy have long been represented by ambassadors, usually men of rank and title, while more recent additions have been Mexico, Brazil and Japan, the latter having only taken on this dignity a few months ago, when the Viscount de Senoaki succeeded the accomplished Mr. Takahira, whose great work in his country's welfare has been rewarded by an important post in Tokio.

Quite equal in social importance with the cabinet and diplomatic corps is the supreme court, which, with its nine members appointed for life, constitutes a permanent aristocracy which sees administrations come and go with an indifference that sometimes is almost fatal. With the exception of the chief justice, who is a widower, all the members of the present court are married, thus making nine important households to consider in making up a calendar of official society.

The number of young people in this particular circle has been considerably reduced since last season, for less than four supreme court girls having been married since the early spring. The last of this quartet was Miss Frances Fuller, youngest of the chief justice's seven daughters, who surprised her friends by a hasty return to town last July, when her marriage to Dr. Robert Mason, a young physician of Washington, took place at the Fuller home, in P street, without the formality of any cards of invitation and without the presence of the bride's distinguished father. If, as has been hinted, this last Fuller romance was against the wish of the chief justice, who finds it easier to preside over the highest tribunal of the land than to direct a household of daughters, all has been forgiven the youthful bride, who is radiantly happy in a modest flat on Nineteenth street, where she enjoys complete immunity from the duties as well as honors that were hers in her father's home. Dr. Mason is a Virginian of the Virginia school, a graduate of the University of Virginia, and extremely popular in society, but not blessed with any fortune beyond his professional income.

The first of this season's fashionable wedding took place last Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Carolyn Postlethwaite, daughter of the late Rev. William H. Postlethwaite, United States army, once chaplain at West Point, and Henry Ives Cobb, Jr., of New York, were married at St. John's church, Lafayette Square.

The bridegroom's sister, Miss Leonard Cobb, the maid of honor, who spent most of her childhood in Washington when her father was supervising architect of the treasury, enjoys the distinction of being the first of the long line of friends who share the affection and confidence of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, when that young matron was Alice Roosevelt. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ives Cobb, parents of the bridegroom, then occupied a handsome home on N street, near the residence of the then Chief Service Commissioner and Mrs. Roosevelt, just around the corner. Wednesday's ceremony was consequently the culmination of a romance begun in the school days of the bride and bridegroom, although their engagement was only announced in the past summer from Paris, where the bride and her mother spent several weeks, and where the bridegroom is a student of architecture at the Beaux Arts. After a short honeymoon near New York, Mr. Cobb and his bride will sail for Europe, where the former will continue his studies.

CAPTURE OF STOCK THIEF IN NORTHERN NEW MEXICO

News from Las Vegas is to the effect that Santiago Padilla, alias Santiago Pena, an alleged notorious stock thief, was captured at Rafael, Union county, New Mexico, by William Boylan, and was brought to that city. Padilla had been employed by Boylan on his ranch, and it is charged, borrowed a horse ostensibly to go to a dance. When he did not return an investigation was made and it was found he had changed horses at another ranch. Boylan, with friends, followed him for over a week and finally overtook him. When discovered it is said he was driving eleven head of cattle, eight of which have been identified as belonging to a ranchman near Springer. The prisoner signed a confession.

Santiago Padilla de Pena, the man arrested by William Boylan and brought to Las Vegas, charged with the theft of two horses and eleven head of cattle, appeared before District Attorney S. B. Davis, Jr., in his office Monday afternoon and admitted the stealing of the horses, a saddle and bridle, but implicated others in the case.

Head of the stolen cattle, branded "E. L." on the right side, belong to Nelson Kritt, a ranchman residing near Springer, N. M. No owner has yet been found of the other three head of cattle, two of which are branded "B."

It is said that a posse from Raton is scouring Colfax county for two more men belonging to the same band of stock thieves.

IRRIGATION WITH A VENGEANCE WHEN BIG RIVER BREAKS LOOSE

WATER TEARS ITS WAY THROUGH
NEW COURSE AND SUBMERGES
TOWNS AND PROPERTY WORTH
MILLIONS—DEFIES ALL ATTEMPTS TO CHECK THE FLOOD
—FINAL STRUGGLE IS NOW ON.

Capturing a runaway river—a third of a mile wide, gone on a rampage, cutting new channels, submerging railroads, wiping out towns and making a great inland sea mile after mile—is the task.

Hanchera on the desert of southern California wanted water. An irrigation enthusiast volunteered. He tapped the Colorado river and the floods came and overcame him. The river tore its way through a new course. Six times during the past year has man attempted to check the current and six times has the river won. As often as the little dikes of sticks and stones and dirt have been built, so often have the fierce floods buried them away like mud and chips of a child's play dam.

A last attempt is being made. It is the final struggle to reclaim 160 miles of railway track, the 400,000 acres of irrigated land to save a dozen little towns and to prevent a $2,000,000 irrigation dam from becoming worthless. About $15,000,000 worth of property is at stake.

Will man or the river win?

THE WHIM OF A RIVER. (By Gilson Gardner.)

Special Correspondence.

Yuma, Ariz., Oct. 11.—For twenty months the Colorado river has been a tramp from its proper course to the sea. At a point just over the boundary line between Arizona and Mexico it turns aside and flows through a new channel into a great natural depression which used to be called Salton sink and which has now become Salton sea or lake. The lowest part of this depression is 267 feet and the present level of the water is 215 feet below the sea level. The area of this new fresh water lake is 250,000 acres and it may double unless the river is turned. The water is now rising at the rate of three inches a week.

The Salton sink is now an uncanny lake with its creeping shore line shown with foliage of trees and telegraph poles and the occasional floating shack of the evicted settler.

A fool man started the trouble. He wanted a larger flow of water for the lands at Imperial, a private irrigation enterprise, and he got it. The floods last spring were unusually violent, and with no gates or controlling works to check the flow, Mr. Heiler's little cut attracted the frolicsome river, which started on a gallop for the Salton.

There are neither bottom nor sides to the river. It flows through bottomless deposits of silt earth as soluble as sugar. The water touches it and it is gone.

Piles driven in this silt popped up and floated down the stream. Dams built on it were undermined and circumvented. There was nothing to tie to; no rock on which to get a grip. The structure was always built upon the sands, and when the winds blew and the floods came, they contained the same fate as the one of which the Scriptures tell.

So this was the task that confronted the men who resolved to make a last fight for that $15,000,000 stake. The Southern Pacific railway was the agency that finally moved. Mr. Hartman and Epps Randolph, of the Arizona lines, took over a controlling interest in the Imperial irrigation lands and then gave orders to "go to it."

WOMAN BLACKSMITH LIKES IT BETTER THAN TEACHING SCHOOL

A NEBRASKA VILLAGE SMITHY
HAS A WHITE CURTAINED
BOUDOIR—MRS. WILCOX HAS
HER THREE GIRLS FOLLOWING THE TRADE.

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 12.—The shop where Mrs. Phillip P. Wilcox, the woman blacksmith of College View, Neb., spends the working day swinging heavy sledges and shoeing horses shows at a glimpse that it is no ordinary smithy. The two-story building is painted a pretty sky-blue. The upper story is the home of the Wilcox family. The smithy shows the touch of the woman in its orderly arrangement, its clean windows, its long boudoir with looking glass, towel rack and a rug on the floor.

Mrs. Wilcox does not possess the build generally associated with the village blacksmith. She is scarcely five feet tall and weighs little more than 100 pounds. The conversation and manner of the little woman is gentle and refined, and of course she never thinks of swinging, even when everything goes wrong. She is well schooled and has taught in district schools.

Mr. Wilcox is a swarthy man with a black mustache and a hearty, cheerful laugh. He neither drinks, smokes, swears nor sweats. He is very proud of this fact and he is prouder of his wife. During the winter he does as much of the work in the shop as Mrs. Wilcox, but when he is away for weeks at a time she easily carries on the business.

"I'm not looking for any notoriety," says Mrs. Wilcox. "I took up this business because I like it. It was my husband's occupation twenty years ago when we were married and I learned it from him. I soon became an expert at it that I kept the shop running during the summer when he was away. I found I could make more money that way than I could teaching school, and I liked the work better. My husband was working in the railroad shops in Ottawa, Kan., at that time. He resigned there because they wanted him to work on the Sabbath. The Wilcoxes are seventh day Adventists. Saturday is their Sabbath."

"We had a shop in our own yard here in Ottawa," continued Mrs. Wilcox. "For a while the railroad let my

"We simply had to win," said Cory as he gazed at the yellow waters tearing like a mill race at the barriers which his labor had put in their path. "There is too much at stake to lose. This is our last chance. If we don't win now we lose for good. Then what of the towns of Mexicali, India, Mecca, Therman and all the others tributary to this irrigation country? We've simply got to win."

CUTTING OF TIMBER MUST CEASE

ON GOVERNMENT LANDS WITH-OUT PERMIT—SPECIAL AGENT
DEZENDORF SECURES TWO INDICTMENTS.

Frederick C. Desendorf, chief special agent of the general land office for New Mexico and Arizona, spent several days last week at Las Cruces and called the attention of the United States grand jury in sessions there to cases of illegal timber cutting in the Organ mountain. As a result of his visit indictments were returned against two men who were accused of having cut timber on government land unlawfully and they entered pleas of guilty when they were arraigned in court. Mr. Desendorf stated that the government has decided to put a stop to the cutting of timber on the public domain and hereafter it will not be allowed unless a permit has been granted and then only under government supervision. The objection to the indiscriminate cutting of timber is that those who have been doing it in the past have been in the habit of leaving dead trunks and brush piles on the ground and increasing the danger of forest fires. If a tree is cut down under government regulations the limbs must also be removed and the limbs alone cannot be cut leaving the dead trunk. Permits may be secured upon application at the federal land office and comply with the rules laid down by the government.

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION WILL GIVE

Large Space and Attention to Government Exhibits of the Uses For
DENATURED ALCOHOL BOTH
IN ARTS AND ON FARMS

Acres of Potatoes Will Supply Heat,
Light and Power One Year
For One Farm.

(By James Hines.)

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 12.—The efficiency of electricity as a power agent was demonstrated at the Buffalo Pan-American exposition, and in order to conform to the plan that the exhibits of the Jamestown Ter-Centennial should display only that which represents the greatest achievements attained in every line, an original and unique feature will be the exhibit showing the uses of denatured alcohol for light, heat, power and fuel. It will also include tests of its application to domestic and industrial purposes, in a building designed and completely constructed for that purpose.

The experiments and tests will be under the direction of Dr. Charles E. Moore, professor of chemistry at George Washington university, Washington, D. C., and chief of the special denatured alcohol exhibit of the Jamestown exposition, who is now traveling to secure an exhibit that will be one of the attractive and instructive features of the exhibition. He is making extensive plans for the display of the many uses to which it can be applied, and has just completed a series of tests embracing the application of this agent in several branches of the varied industries. This exhibit has received the endorsement and co-operation of the National Alcohol association, which has appointed a special commissioner to assist Dr. Moore in this work.

Discussing the results attained in his experiments and tests Dr. Moore said: "It has been found by satisfactory tests that denatured alcohol is an efficient agent when burned for generating heat and light, and when exploded in an internal combustion engine equally effective for the production of power. It is the intention to bring before the visitors to the Jamestown exposition many devices in which alcohol can be successfully utilized."

"Already a large number of lamps have been invented for household use in which incandescent mantle replaces the wick of the ordinary lamp by substituting alcohol for kerosene and produces a soft and brilliant light. This test alone proves that the farmer and others, who are unable to avail themselves of gas and electricity can have a superior light at the cost of oil. Moreover, as a source of power, it is possible for the agriculturist to utilize alcohol for pumping water, thrashing wheat or for traction purposes in plowing or cultivating the soil."

"Every phase of its efficacy will be demonstrated by exhibits showing its operation of household conveniences and devices and the several uses to which it can be applied in the various branches of the liberal arts."

Tests have been made, said Prof. Moore, showing that a greater horse power could be developed in properly constructed engines with alcohol than with gasoline, and that it will likely exceed the latter agent for automobile purposes. It is, therefore, preferable, he said, and not attended by the objectionable odors of gasoline.

According to the same authority it was conclusively shown during the congressional hearing on the bill to remove the tax on alcohol that it sold for $2.30 for each proof gallon, while it could be manufactured and sold between 20 and 25 cents per gallon, the tax of $1.10 preventing its extended use heretofore in the arts. Taking this as a basis, Mr. Moore believes that its general use as a substitute to gasoline will be shortly adopted, not only because of its superiority and economy, but because it does not possess the dangerous elements of gasoline.

Its importance as a source of revenue is at present the chief consideration of the United States department of agriculture, which has taken hold of the work with energy. Dr. Callaway, chief of the bureau of plant industry, has charge of the work and has dispatched agents to Europe to study the great alcohol plants, which in grown very generally there. His food value is small, but its yield per acre is immense, being sufficient to produce 600 gallons of the best alcohol. This means that one acre of these potatoes would supply heat, light and power to a farm household for one year. If this variety of potato can be grown successfully here, and there seems to be no doubt of that, it will rapidly become one of the most important domestic industries.

The department will also experiment with corn stalks, clover, beet stalks and various root crops. In maturing several of the state agricultural departments are at work along the same lines. The distillation of alcohol from molasses has already been undertaken by several large concerns.

In view of the great interest manifested in this new industry every effort is being exerted to make the exhibit at the exposition to be held next year on the shores of Hampton Roads near Norfolk, Va., so complete as to conclusively show the best and cheapest method of producing denatured alcohol together with its application for use in the arts.

H. J. RAMER IS A BANKRUPT

THE EXTENSIVE CATTLE RAISER
IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA IS GREATLY INVOLVED.

News comes from Las Vegas that H. J. Ramer, well known in this city and owner of "The Fair" circus and glassware store on Railroad avenue a few years ago, which was under the management of A. B. McEliff and J. W. Mallett, has gone into bankruptcy. The following article on the subject is clipped from the Optic:

James Mills late Friday afternoon signed an order in the Ramer bankruptcy case fixing the time for the appearance and answer of the defendant on November 12.

This suit is one of considerable importance. The total value of Mr. Ramer's New Mexico, Arizona and Mexico property is said to be about $200,000. The Phoenix ranch at Yarnous, one of the finest in the territory, was recently assigned to the San Miguel bank. The bank has a mortgage on the property and so has H. M. Porter of Denver. J. H. Reynolds is said to have claims secured by mortgage amounting to upwards of $50,000 against the Arizona property. Besides Mrs. Padlock and Chas. Hild who are bringing the bankruptcy proceedings, there are said to be several other creditors whose claims are not secured.

Spence & Davis and Long & Ward are the attorneys for the petitioning creditors, while the San Miguel bank is represented by Wm. G. Haydon.

SINKING FUND BONDS
Quincy, Ill., Oct. 12.—The Chicago Burlington and Quincy railroad company having set aside $232,452 recently issued proposals today for the purchase of sinking fund bonds of the Iowa division. The bonds were called at the lowest price, not to exceed par and with accrued interest for 4 per cent bonds or 100 and accrued interest for 5 per cent bonds.

E. H. Beckford and J. H. Nelson of Lake Valley, are among the shrewdest. Mr. Beckford is the manager of the Lake Valley Mining company and Mr. Nelson is his assistant. The latter gentleman was initiated into the mine during this afternoon.

"DISARMAMENT"

VERDICT FOR THE UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT RECOVERS FROM P. J. CALAN ON ACCOUNT OF FT. BAYARD CONTRACT.
In the federal court at El Paso last Saturday the case of the United States vs. P. J. Calan, the contractor, and his sureties, W. S. McCutcheon and J. B. Badger, was tried by a jury, says the Times. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the government in the sum of $2,434 against Calan, and in favor of the defendant sureties, McCutcheon and Badger.

The suit grew out of a contract entered into between the United States and Contractor Calan for constructing some additions to the government sanitarium at Ft. Bayard. The work had been completed by the government and Calan had been paid by the government. It was claimed that the heating plant installed by him was defective and not according to contract. The government required the defective heating plant at a cost of $2,474, and then undertook to recover back from Calan and his bondsmen. The jury found that the bondsmen were not liable, but that Calan was for the amount that the government had expended in replacing the defective and returned a verdict accordingly.

SILVER CITY DITCH KILLS OLD SETTLER
The Main street artery in Silver City proved a death trap to one of the county's oldest citizens last Saturday. Samuel Weiss, a well known carpenter, who had been employed at Leopold and who had been stopping for about a week in the town, was the victim. He was last seen on the street at about 3 o'clock in the morning. At 6 o'clock he was found by a Mexican lying face down in the ditch, twenty-five feet below the street, and was shortly afterward removed to the Ladies hospital. On examination it was found that his left shoulder was broken, the back of his head bruised and the ribs of his right side crushed into his lungs. His death ensued shortly after his arrival at the hospital.

In dealing with the boxer himself in China, together with his picture as into the interior of the Flowery Kingdom, and his experience in Korea and Japan the bishop was at times quite realistic, as a result of which his audience at the close of the entertainment left the house with a more perfect understanding of the countries and peoples whom he discussed than they had in most cases previously possessed.

THE MOUNT TAYLOR FOREST RESERVE

OFFICIAL PROCLAMATION OF THE PRESIDENT ESTABLISHING IT—LOCATED IN VALENCIA COUNTY.

The following is the official proclamation of the president, declaring and setting aside the Mount Taylor forest reserve in Valencia county, in this territory:

Mount Taylor Forest Reserve, New Mexico.
By the President of the United States of America—A Proclamation.
Whereas, the public lands in the territory of New Mexico, which are hereinafter mentioned, are in part covered with timber, and it appears that the public good would be promoted by setting apart said lands as a public reservation;

And whereas, it is provided by section 24 of the act of congress, approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber culture laws and for other purposes," that the president of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve, in any state or territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands, wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the president shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations, and the time thereof;

Now therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, president of the United States of America, by virtue of the power in me vested by section 24 of the aforesaid act of congress, do proclaim that there are hereby reserved from entry or settlement and set apart as a public reservation, for the use and benefit of the people, all the tracts of land in the territory of New Mexico, shown on the diagram forming a part hereof.

This proclamation will not take effect upon any lands withdrawn or reserved, at this date, from settlement, entry or other appropriation, for any purpose other than forest uses, or which may be covered by any prior valid claim, so long as the withdrawal, reservation or claim exists.

Warning is hereby given to all persons not to make settlement upon the lands reserved by this proclamation. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 30th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and six, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-sixth.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

JUDGE ADAMS WANTS DESCRIPTIVE LITERATURE

That a strong fight is being made to secure the next biennial meeting of the Knights of Pythias for Albuquerque was again manifested this morning when Secretary F. F. McCanna of the Commercial club received a second telegram from Judge Adams requesting him to send more descriptive literature of Albuquerque. Judge Adams, who is in New Orleans at the meetings of the Knights of Pythias, is optimistic of the Duke City's chances to secure the next biennial meeting of the lodge. Press dispatches state the crowd at New Orleans is enormous and the meeting of the lodge here would bring many people to Albuquerque. But whether Albuquerque secures the meeting or not, it is a certainty that the Duke City will be well advertised in New Orleans among people from all over the United States.

W. M. Lund, a well known Meadow City contractor, who has been here in search of employers and carpenters, returned to his Las Vegas home last night. He was successful in finding acre the employer required.

STATEHOOD EXCITES INTEREST IN DEMING

"WE ARE RIGHT ON IT," JUDGE PENNINGTON DECLARES IN AN INTERVIEW.

"Deming is all right," replied Judge Edward Pennington, postmaster of Deming, this morning to The Citizen, answering queries concerning things in general down his way. The judge is here attending the Masonic meetings. He chatted pleasantly with a newspaperman about the progress of Deming and the attitude on the statehood question.

"We haven't any boom in Deming and don't want any. The town is growing steadily though. Many new buildings are being erected, and the kind of buildings is better and more substantial than ever before.

"The country around the town is being settled up rapidly and by a fine class of people."
"Within the past two or three months more land has been located and settled on than during the twelve years preceding. A big irrigation ditch is being put in three miles east of Deming, running south from the Mimbres river and the land on both sides of this ditch and below it is all taken up.

"The new and cheap methods of pumping water are proving successful and as there is an inexhaustible supply of water fifty or sixty feet below the surface, the question of irrigation by pumping is settled satisfactorily as to quantity and cost.

"We have had to double the capacity of our public school building this year, that shows how we are growing in population."
"How about politics down your way?" Mr. Pennington was asked.

"Guess our people are too busy just now for politics. We are taking a lively interest in the statehood question and will be found all right on that proposition."

"Both political parties have put good tickets up for county offices, the republicans having the best of course. But our county affairs will be well administered, whichever ticket is successful."

FELL INTO A NET OF WIRE
MAN LAY ABOVE STREET FOR NEARLY AN HOUR BEFORE CROWD CALLED FIREMEN.

Special Correspondence.
Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 11.—John Soulen, a clerk in the new insurance building, did a slack wire stunt recently that for injecting thrills into the spectators who witnessed it, had looped loops and loop-the-loops faded away into the dim horizon.

Soulen's office is on the top floor of the building and he performed his "act" by falling from a window on that floor into a bunch of about a hundred wires that ran from a pole into the offices of a telephone company, a couple of wires below. There he lay suspended fifty feet above the pavement.

Soulen's act was not voluntary. He simply lost his balance and he doesn't care to perform the feat again. He clung to the wires, with for three minutes of an hour, while a huge crowd gathered beneath and thrilled spectators shouted numerous idiotic suggestions at him.

When somebody got a glimmer of sense and called the fire department, which picked him off in a jiffy.

SILK COAT

For the first chilly days a handsome silk coat has been imported. The fabric is heavy and lustrous and the somber black is relieved by white satin and delicate embroidery.

One of the ultra-fashionable shapes for street coats is the cutaway, and this jacket is built upon these lines. The cutaway begins at the bust and in three-quarters length.

The white satin is introduced effectively in the short underarm piece which is touched with a heavy cord. The pointed revers are also of the white satin, but are delicately embroidered with mauve and silver. A decided touch to the coat. The sleeves are long and roomy.

SERGE SUIT

A smart little suit of French blue serge serge has a small surprise coat which vanishes under a high girle at the way around. The skirt has unique panels, heavily stitched. The buttons on the tabs are of blue stone, each holding a large dark blue stone.

The sleeves are large puffs with cuffs to the elbows. From these fall small circular cape pieces over the fore arms.

VELVET HAT

A new blue velvet hat has a low, round crown, short in front. Massed around the front are gold grapes, while curled luxuriantly at the back and sides are four large feathers in deep gold and gray.

New York Fashion Letter

New York, Oct. 12.—I must tell you of the newest thing in sleeves that has just come out. It is called the "sling sleeve," which comes from the manner of its draping, for when the arm is slipped through it, it has the appearance of a sling, and, of course, that is graceful and attractive, which though it may suggest "first aid," is so pretty and novel that it promises to be a favorite with the woman who is looking for novel things.

The description given me by one of our designers is fetching. "The sleeve is either plain or folded, cut circular, put into the arm without fullness and drawn towards the shoulder and slightly caught up there to give the sling effect. There is no underarm seam. The edges are left apart but joined by bands of velvet or braid or stitched straps of the cloth. In length it comes below the elbow as all correct sleeves for the winter should do. The hem is very open and loose, without flaring. It is finished with a band of velvet or cloth. Usually the edge of this is trimmed with frills of plaited lace or ribbon or hand embroidery. This is especially the kind of trimming used a great deal on every kind of sleeve, particularly those that have the French make and finish."

If this sleeve is considered too unprotective for the cold weather, because of its openness at the back and the bare wrist, many women overcome this objection by putting in a fancy colored lining, and if the sleeve material is very thin, such as lace, lingere, thin silk, etc., two linings are used, the first of some warm silk, or wool, or other material over which is a fancy lining of colored silk to harmonize with the gown, and over this is draped the sling sleeve. Such sleeves are a relief to anotherwise plain gown, and they have the recommendation of being new and very stylish, which will make it popular for theater and reception wear.

There has been a good deal of dispute over the empire dress and coat, but at last the designers have come to the conclusion that it shall stay with us for this season, at least. Certainly there are modifications the ladies of the French court would never recognize and probably would deem a dereliction from that classic mode so much affected by them, but the styles suitable for a French court are not adapted for the hustling life of the modern American woman, who seldom plays the doll, whose life is spent in strenuous affairs of life and living which keeps her even more busy than the most ardent "little diplomat" of those old days.

Some of the changes are the tight fitting lining, which curves at the waist line like the princess dress and really gets its name from the bolero that hangs loosely about the shoulders and bust. And the newest modification is the silk sleeve just described above. For dressy wear in a carriage, at a reception, the theater, or any place where dignity, style and long graceful lines are needed, it is certainly the dress to wear. If the woman is not too stout, may wear it, but flesh-never. It was designed for a woman of the Diana type, and proportion is its first requisite.

The coats of the empire style are certainly very beautiful when made in some of the heavy close silks, such as some of the heavy close silks, that keep their place, while the boleros is of heavy, fine lace, some of which represents a small fortune in itself. Then there are the beautiful emblems of jeweled buttons that are used, and then come another pretty penny. Altogether the dress coat is a rather expensive affair and is seldom easy to make for the home dressmaker. Indeed, coats are even harder than the dress for the fingers of the amateur, and nearly always show her trade mark.

There is just now a deal of indecision about the most fashionable length of coats. The short coat and bolero are favorites with the majority of women, and as they may be made as warm as you like, there is no reason why they may not be a favorite, but the tailors and designers generally are trying to keep the long or three-quarter coat. To the front and of course trade must be helped out. Then there are women who look too well in the long or half length coat to be considered. There is one thing to be said for the short coat, it is easy to put on, it is less cumbersome and leaves the skirts and limbs free for walking.

In the matter of coats I saw some very beautiful ones last week draped with cloth the same shade as the silk of which they were made. There seems to be a great liking for these coats of silk trimmed with cloth bands, and a few ultra-fashionable women are having suits made, consisting of cloth skirts decorated only with machine stitching and usually laid in box plaits, inverted plaits or tucks, while the coat is of silk of the same shade as the skirt and strapped with the cloth bands, and the majority of these are of the long hip length; a few were close fitting, but many others were of the pony style, slightly modified to suit the figure of the wearer.

The short coats of the winter styles are not cut off as those of the summer ones were, and are a little below the waist line, some of them belted in large bone buttons or fastener ones for dressy coats are "used to fasten these jaunty little garments which are single breasted, but many have a pointed lap over to the left side from the right, or tabs, or straight straps down the front. Remember the belt should be narrow, three inches being considered the limit for the widest, some of which are of leather, which gives a quite natly appearance to a street costume but is not suitable for those intending for dressy wear. All the coats seen so far fasten in front with buttons close to the throat and indeed there are some that are quite military in the style of collar, but are not popular for wear with the fancy blouse or one that has a pretty collar. Of course, it is better taste with such a jacket to wear a taller blouse.

Broderie Anglaise is to be worn this winter on coats, of course. Its use is old but used on cloth and velvet and in large quantities is new, and yet it is more effective as a trimming, and it is likely to be very popular for those used for theater, reception, calling and the long opera cloaks. In many cases it is dyed to match the color of the gown and is then used as panels on the skirt, boleros, wide collars and cuffs. A pretty example of such a suit was seen made of heavy blue cloth, rather light in shade, the skirt was laid in plaits on the back and sides, while in the front was a shaped panel of the Broderie Anglaise; the empire belt was of soft silk, which fastened under a wide buckle and border of the embroidery. The blouse was of white silk and over it was worn a bolero of Broderie Anglaise. The hat that was worn with this dress was of an olive shade, that peculiar tint that goes so well with certain lines, and its trimming was a big chon of brown net in the turned up back about the brim was a wreath of autumn roses and leaves, showing dull shades of rose and brown and yellow, and out from among them arose a blue ostrich plume, falling from the right side front over the left and back. Brown gloves, a brown card case and umbrella were worn with this costume. Although in the telling it may sound somewhat crude, if one has in mind the usual shades of these colors, so much care, skill and taste had been expended the combination of the costume that there was not one discordant note, and the wearer with her fair hair and complexion, was a pleasant thing to look upon.

In opposition to embroidery will be the idea that for will be put on, for paradoxical as it sounds, they will be worn together, and often the effect is most harmonious when some of the soft brown furs are placed against the creamy white embroidery. This is seen on some of the most artistic hats seen in the exhibition. One of these hats had a crown of fine Broderie Anglaise and by the way all embroideries must be of the same soft fine varieties. The brim was of velvet, blue, and about the crown was a tall of fur, the head lying on the left front on a bunch of Japanese iris, the fashionable flower this winter. Underneath the left side was another small showing of fur, iris and velvet, held together with a large gold buckle. The costume worn with this hat was a blue cloth, consisting of a cloth empire skirt with a crumpled down the front panel, while the bolero was of velvet trimmed with fur tails, over a Broderie Anglaise blouse, lined with yellow silk. Brown gloves the exact shade of the fur carried out the beautiful color scheme.

A great vogue is provided for the Russian pony skirt that made so good an impression last season and for the regulation street costume, traveling, etc., it is very stylish; but as an accessory to a dress suit to be worn at a high function it has too much the appearance of the "rough and ready."

Wounds, Bruises and Burns. By applying an anti-septic dressing to wounds, bruises, burns and like injuries before inflammation sets in, they may be healed without maturation and in about one-third the time required by the old treatment. This is the greatest discovery and triumph of modern surgery. Chamberlain's Pain Balm acts on this same principle. It is an antiseptic and when applied to such injuries, causes them to heal very quickly. It also allays the pain and soreness and prevents any danger of blood poisoning. Keep a bottle of Pain Balm in your home for all such emergencies. It is so simple and it will save you time and money, and it will save you the inconvenience and suffering such injuries entail. ### AFTERNOON GOWN

A handsome afternoon gown in shade of chiffon velvet of the softest pastel shade of ash-colored. The high corset skirt is a most singular and much plaited to give stiffness at the foot.

A broad fold of the velvet is the only skirt trimming. Across the shoulders and vanishing beneath the high skirt edge, are shaped revers of the velvet. They are held in place by old gold buckles, showing a touch of olden and cuffs are made of heavy Irish guipure, and the little collar and shallow yoke are of French lace.

AUTUMN GOWN

A handsome autumn costume, fresh from the hands of a smart tailor, is of brown cloth, trimmed with embroidered panne velvet. The skirt is untripped and has the unlucky number of thirteen pockets in it, yet is correct and well fitting.

The long coat is close-fitting at the back and semi-fitting in the front, opening over an elaborate waistcoat. To permit this to be well seen, the coat is cut decidedly low, while over the shoulders is an unique arrangement of the broadcloth. This arrangement is held in place by large smoked pearl buttons, two of which fasten the garment below the waistcoat. The brown velvet of this is wrought with a variety of colored silks in floral design. The sleeves are long and half fitting.

An Awful Cough Cured. "Two years ago our little girl had a touch of pneumonia, which left her with an awful cough. She had spells of coughing, just like one with the whooping cough, and some thought she would not get well at all. We got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which acted like a charm. She stopped coughing and got stout and fat," writes Mrs. Ora Russell, Brainerd, Ill. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

FUEL ORE WILL MEAN MUCH IN SMALL MINES. Denver, Colo., Oct. 12.—At many mines small smelting plants particularly those which are situated at a distance from a coal supply or where transportation of coal is difficult and expensive the fuel problem, which was one of the most difficult that confronted the operator, is now on a fair way of being solved. As fuel ore can be used with great advantage and can always be at hand, experiments are being tried with it, with such results, that already it is the general opinion that it will be made available for all mining operations. It is not only well adapted to steam raising and smelting purposes but it is especially effective in assaying furnaces, small smelting furnaces, annealing and hardening furnaces or in fact in any furnace in which quick and easily regulated heat is a very desirable degree is required.

Barker of Warrenton, Va., had considerable difficulty in making their awards.

A KILL OF SIXTY QUAIL IN ONE DAY. F. H. Rhodes, superintendent for the Pullman company on the western lines of the Santa Fe, and a companion, spent yesterday hunting quail in the vicinity of Rincon. The sport was fine and at night the game sack contained sixty birds.

Quail are more plentiful in New Mexico this year than at any time in the memory of the oldest settlers. Mr. Rhodes and his companion yesterday raised not less than fifty quail, and in some of them the quail were out in others the birds were too small to shoot, the quail, consisting of a couple of old birds and a dozen or two of very tame young ones.

The first shooting of the hunters encountered was between Esley and Nut stations on the River City branch. On landing in Rincon the hunters were told so many tales of quail so thick that one could knock them down with a stick, that they were in quite a quandary as to which way to go. The Nut hill grade on the River City branch was finally chosen, and so better shots could have been made. The hunters left the Nut hill and walked to Nut. The distance is a little over three miles. After reaching the first camp, the shooters had little trouble keeping their quail. Quail were found under nearly every bunch of mesquite brush they came to, some of them so tame that they would take wing only after being run at. At least thirty quail were found between Esley and Nut and after two and a half hours shooting the hunters tramped over Nut hill into the station with the bag bulging with a kill of forty-three. It was just noon and after a busy lunch the hunters returned to Rincon. Two hours evening shooting along the hills of the Rio Grande valley, where the quail are plentiful, making a total kill of some dozens. The birds are plump, and have no taste whatever of sage, which is often the case with mountain quail. The hunters returned to the city on the morning train.

Peek-a-boo Waist Mania is Dying

have stopped in the middle of their sermons to raise their hands to heaven in disgust at what they termed the "immorality" of the peek-a-boo woman. President Roosevelt also had his say about the much discussed waist. He even threw in the open-work stockings as a shocking example of the American woman's moral decay. But just so long as her desire for pretty things was satisfied the woman herself didn't care what the masculine part of humanity was saying. Suddenly, however, she became tired and wanted a change and the mannish tailor-made shirt-waist was brought forth and the fashionable waistmakers are marking down their $25 lingerie waists to anything you want to pay for them just to get rid of them, for Dame Fashion is abroad with a new decree and experience has taught that she is not to be trifled with.

The peek-a-boo waist is dead, and from its ashes rises the severe tailor-made lined shirtwaist of classic outline. And now the ministers and moralists who have made themselves hoarse preaching against the flimsy short-skirted peek-a-boo may fold their hands in prayer for the American woman with her capricious desire for change is anxious to demonstrate to the world that nature gave her a pair of broad, perfectly shaped shoulders, the effect of which cannot be marred by the mannish shirt-waist that is now considered the proper thing.

There has been so article of feminine attire for several decades that has created such a furore as the flimsy, flimsy, fuzzy, lace-trimmed peek-a-boo waist. Ministers from the altar
