ALVEY, KILLER OF WALTERS, IN JAIL

Roswell News

James E. Alvey, who shot and killed J. Walter Walters, has been in jail here some time, but as it was thought he was hiding in the vicinity of his ranch, and if possible, apprehend him. Mr. Clark shot at him and missed, when he was seen going up a hill. He was seen to enter a car and come upon Alvey in Court Harley's Yard, was shot twice, once through the northwest of Roswell. A bad job in the beginning, Alvey was stopped and asked why he was trying to get away and he was shot twice and in a somewhat jaded condition but told Sheriff Clark he was shot and then went to Roswell as he did not wish to lay on until morning and went over to the next grand jury. Clark told him he was there in the same way and turn over to the sheriff and that bewildered roll.

Under the spreading cottonwood trees everyone rested for an hour or three and then leisurely strolled through the Bill Jones' orchard and garden. Mr. Jones' trees are loaded with fruit, as well any kind you wanted—some of the limbs are splitting off. In the garden there were ripe tomatoes along with melons, beans, beets, potatoes, onions, squash—anything you liked. Franklin Car Makes Wonderful Record in Motor Car Thrift Test

Achievement This Year Not a Surprise To Those Who Know The Franklin's Preceding Records.

One hundred and seventy-nine telegrams, directed to the Franklin factories at Davenport, all stating how for a Franklin car traveled on a single gallon of gas in a recent race, made this week's wake-up to the aggregate a complete story of present-day motor-car thrift, that is national in its significance.

The results of the tests of the National Efficiency Demonstration. Conducted in practically every section of the country and recording a grand average of 45.5 miles on a single gallon of gas, indicate that the Franklin run was the one at New Haven, Ct., where it was driven over a 100 miles each way by one official observer. It's the new world's record for a stock car by running 42.9 miles on one gallon of gasoline. Detroit registered second, with a record of 37.6 miles, Akron, third, with 40.1 miles; and Madison, Wisconsin, with 40.3 miles.

Eighty-six of the 159 entrants had travelled aves of above than 40 miles. There were 19 Franklin cars which did between 40 and 44 miles. And even such an unusual mileage as 56 was recorded by six dealers.

In the manner in which the demonstration was conducted, confirmed essentially to the accepted rules for economy runs. By setting aside a certain day on which to make the test, it was possible to get weather conditions that struck an average for the entire country. As it happened, during the day many points in the Middle West and along the Atlantic Coast had rain and at one end with, while on the Rocky Mountains and Minnesota, there was mush, and in some of the Southern Atlantic States, high winds. But this meant that the motorist in order to offer any advantage of wind must double back over the same course before the outward trip, and for so doing it was planned to have the run terminate as nearly as possible at the same point as that from which it was made.

All preparations, such as measuring the intake of fuel, determination of gasoline, inspection of the separate gasoline tanks, and computing consumption, were taken readings of the speedometer and the motoring car to see that it conformed to the standard type. were conducted by two official observers.
