Notes and Documents

Hubert Howe Bancroft, History of Arizona and New Mexico, 1530-1888 has been reprinted by Horn and Wallace in a limited deluxe facsimile, Albuquerque, New Mexico. The reprint carries a foreword by Senator Clinton P. Anderson of New Mexico and Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona. Priced at $15.00, it can replace many a shopworn copy of the original edition in libraries and find a place in private collections, since the original is not available.

Fast-disappearing skills and traditions of the Indian tribes of Western America are recorded in three 16mm films which are now available through University of California Extension's Department of Visual Communication.

In the 13-minute color film titled "Buckeyes—A Food of the California Indians," a Nisenan Indian demonstrates the ancient method, unique to the California Indians, of preparing the poisonous buckeye, or horse chestnut. The result is an edible and nourishing staple, comparable in food value and taste to the potato.

The art of making the sinew-backed bow and its arrows is remembered by only a single member of the Yurok Tribe of northwestern California. The 24-minute color film, "The Sinew-Backed Bow and Its Arrows," illustrates the painstaking techniques used to produce these weapons of unequalled strength and accuracy.

"Pine Nuts," a 13-minute color film, depicts members of the Paiute tribe preparing the nut of the piñon tree in a manner used by Indians since pre-Columbian times. The pine nut has served as a nutritious staple food for both the Paiute and Washoe Indians of California and Nevada.

The films were planned and supervised by the late A. L. Kroeber, University of California professor emeritus of anthropology, and S. A. Barrett, project director of the American Indian films, with financial support from the National Science Foundation.

Further information is available from the Department of Visual Communications, University of California Extension, Berkeley 4, Calif.
