FRIDAY, MARCH 28.

New Mexico Demands Statehood of the 37th Congress.

Of Right and in Justice New Mexico Should Be a State.

United States Senator Hanna is getting to be quite a strike sealer. He is evidently growing in every direction.

The yellow sheets of the country are trying to make a mountain out of the General Miles testimony mole hill. Anything for a sensation.

Former President Grover Cleveland will be sixty-eight years of age on the 4th of March, 1904, and still he will be willing to take the Democratic nomination for the presidency.

Several new papers have been started in New Mexico of late. This is all right as long as they can be supported. As yet there is not an overplus of newspapers in New Mexico.

The news from South Africa, as to the ending of the war there, is very favorable. To disinterested people it looks as if the stoppage of the strife there would be beneficial to all concerned.

There is a greater evil in American politics than pernicious activity and that is culpable indifference. This is respectfully referred to the good citizens who stay away from the primaries and the polls and then howl about corrupt government.

If the lava beds of New Mexico can be turned into fertilizers and its underground streams be utilized for irrigation the territory will be in position to feel very independent of the rest of the United States. The Dakotas and Minnesota wouldn't then be in it as wheat producers.

The Arkansas senatorial situation is becoming quite hot for that great and good friend of Colonel Bryan, namely the Hon. James K. Jones, United States senator and candidate for re-election. His opponents are loaded with dynamite and are daring the senator to kick them.

Rathbone and Neeley, who committed extensive postal frauds a couple of years ago while connected with the postal system in the island of Cuba, have been found guilty and sentenced to ten years imprisonment and to pay a fine of $35,000 each. Justice was evidently not blinded in their cases.

In their testimony before the senate committee on the Philippine Islands several army officers were quite positive that the insurrection in the islands was ended. Press dispatches, however, indicate that some of the insurgents are still somewhat active in the insurrection business.

Several new wireless telegraphy systems are now being tested. One that has been tried on Lake Erie is said to have been very successful. If Marconi does not keep a sharp lookout he will be left away in the rear. The American inventors are getting ahead of him.

A great deal of New Mexico's 78,000,000 acres contains anthracite and bituminous coal. Vast areas of iron ore are also found within these 78,000,000 acres. In twenty-five years New Mexico will be abreast with Pennsylvania as a coal producing and iron and steel manufacturing commonwealth.

All the people of Cuba need to do in order to walk on the shady side of Easy Street, as far as tariff concessions are concerned, is to ask for annexation to this country and be so annexed. This will come sooner or later, although the people of this country do not hanker after it to any alarming extent.

The Democratic members of the senate and house of representatives are very long on sentiment and in theory in the Boer cause and in pity for the Filipino insurgents, but they are rather short when it comes to granting a free vote and honest count to all classes of citizens, south of the Mason and Dixon line.

The sultan of Turkey does not want to repay the ransom of $75,000 paid to the Bulgarian bandits for the release of the pasha and his family. Indeed, he has flatly refused to do so, but, then, as Uncle Sam has several men-of-war ready for action he will insist upon his demands and the sultan will have to come to it sooner or later.

From almost every part of the territory comes the news that the country is settling up fast. With the completion of the contemplated railroad lines to be built in the next few years the tidings will be the country is settling up faster. New Mexico is emerging from the condition of a frontier commonwealth to assume the position of a well settled state. A denser population for New Mexico will mean better roads, better public schools, more churches, greater revenue and an improvement of conditions all around.

Cecil Rhodes is dead, the world keeps on moving and in a few days he will be but a hazy memory. It is to be hoped that he has made disposition of his vast wealth in such manner that it will do some good to atone for the vast amount of evil which followed in the train of his boundless ambition.

Who would have thought it? The administration of the office of the surveyor general of this territory is going on nicely and smoothly and is becoming of more benefit to the interests of New Mexico right along. It is becoming established that the change in the executive head of the office was very beneficial and timely.

The brewers of Durango, Colo., want to encourage the raising of barley in the San Juan country. They want the correct idea of producing their raw material near their breweries. As a corollary to this wisdom, the manufacturers of the east should see how advantageous it would be to them to erect tanneries, woolen mills, etc., near the points where they could secure their raw material, fuel and reach good markets without making a long haul, and that is in New Mexico.

The despoliation of New Mexico's prehistoric ruins must be stopped. Those treasure houses of prehistoric remains and relics have more than a commercial and passing value and are heirlooms of bygone ages which New Mexico people and scientists treasure or should treasure more than material wealth. Unfortunately, vandals have already destroyed or carted away tons upon tons of valuable material of which an infinitesimal part if it had remained intact, might throw a new light upon prehistoric times and conditions.

The Hon. Jeremiah Simpson has become a citizen of Chaves county and has moved his family and household goods to the vicinity of Roswell. That is a very wise move on part of the so-called statesman and Roswell may soon hear a senatorial bee buzzing in its suburbs, that is, should statehood be granted New Mexico. The political color and standing of the Kansas statesman are not well enough known at present to prevent him from coming out for any party that will have the best chance of electing United States senators in New Mexico.

General Funston does not like the New York newspapers and incidentally expresses his contempt of editors in general. Perhaps, General Funston takes the newspapers of New York too seriously or he does not quite understand the motives of editors as a class. Fighting Philinos with a United States commission in the pocket and drawing a nice salary regularly is quite different from editing a newspaper and trying to make it pay. Newspapers are what the dear American public make them and not always what editors would like them to be.

Again the New Mexican desires to call the attention of the Republicans of this city to the fact that they can elect their city ticket by a handsome majority on Tuesday next, providing the nominees shall be of the right stamp of men. The Democrats of this city intend to put up a ticket consisting of the first nominations. As the Republicans make the first nominations, it behooves them to be very careful and make selections of men who have the confidence of the community and who will add strength to the Republican ticket.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat remarks as follows: "Relief measures for the Missouri farmers suffering from the drought of last year should continue until it is certain that all have enough for immediate necessities and seed for spring planting." The sovereign state of Missouri wants federal help for its farmers in its drought stricken sections; but the people of New Mexico must get along as best they can without help from the federal government. The people of New Mexico do not get much help from the federal government, quite the reverse.

Washington dispatches state that the majority of the members of the senate committee on privileges and elections, having in charge the house resolution providing for the election of United States senators by the direct vote of the people, is opposed to the resolution and will report it adversely to the senate.

This is as expected. In addition it may truthfully be said that there is much in favor of the present method of electing United States senators. Upon the whole the question is not a burning one and the people are content to leave the matter as it is.

Eddy county has a balance of $25,519.03 in its county treasury. In every county like Eddy where assessments are fair and tax collections are close there are good balances in the county treasuries and at the same time liberal sums are expended for the public schools, good roads, bridges, etc. On the other hand, in counties where assessments are a farce and tax collections poor, there are deficits, inability to meet interest on debts and to pay bills, but little money for the public schools, bad roads, poor bridges, small court funds, etc. The making of fair assessments is at the root of good government in New Mexico.

The Democrats in congress are very much opposed to the Crumpacker resolution, providing for a committee to investigate and report upon the election laws in force in the southern states. Certainly they are. When one considers for instance that the sovereign state of Mississippi elects seven members of congress by about the same vote that the territory of New Mexico elects one voteless delegate it is very natural that the Democratic members of the senate and house of representatives from that state do not want the election laws, by virtue of which they slide so easily into congressional seats, investigated. They want as little publicity as possible in that matter.

Pen carbon copy books are for sale by the Office Supply Company. They are the best and cheapest in the market. Call and see for yourself.

The bills now pending in congress, called the Stephens-Culberson bills, for the construction of an international dam above El Paso, contain a proviso restricting the use of the waters of the Rio Grande and its tributaries in their catchment areas, and restraining the people of New Mexico from increasing and improving the facilities for the use of the flood and seepage waters in the great area of country watered by the Rio Grande and its tributaries. Senators and representatives from the states in the union ask for a thousand and one things from the people of New Mexico must fight continuously in order to preserve the rights and privileges granted them by solemn treaty and by the constitution of the United States. There is the difference and that is one of the principal reasons why the territory of New Mexico does not contain ten times the inhabitants that it really has.

HERE'S WHAT'S WANTED

A Citizen of Denver Supplies the Needed Information.

Over half the complaints of mankind originate with the kidneys. A slight touch of backache at first. Twinges and shooting pains in the loins follow. They must be checked; they lead to graver complications. The sufferer seeks relief. Plasters are tried and liniments for the back. So-called kidney cures which do not cure.

The long looked for result seems unattainable. If you suffer, do you want relief? Follow the plan adopted by this Denver citizen:

Mr. E. Stiles of 336 South Fifteenth street, Denver, Colorado, employed at Daniels and Fisher's Department store says: "Years ago I got into trouble with my kidneys resulting in rheumatism. I was helpless for months, but in time it wore away as mysteriously as it came. Knowing what I suffered, when an attack of backache seized me and clung to me for a month, it struck me that Doan's Kidney Pills prevented recurrences. I got a supply at my drugists, took a course of the treatment and they worked off the attack."

Missouri Code Pleading

By Mr. Everett W. Pattison, (Author of Pattison's Complete Digest.) Nearly 600 Pages. Price, $6. Delivered. This Book is a Very Important One for all Lawyers.

The New Mexican Code is largely modeled on the Missouri Code so that this book and the Form book are the most practicable for use thereunder. It sets forth, as succinctly as is consistent with clearness, the present condition of the law governing pleading as interpreted by the courts of last resort in Missouri. The decisions are mostly those of the Missouri courts; though in some instances illustrations have been drawn from the decisions of other code states.

The Author Thoroughly Believes in the Advantages of the Code System of Pleading.

He further believes that precision and exactness are even of more importance in code pleading than in pleading at common law. For, while it is true that the common law requires the utmost strictness in adherence to forms, yet, if forms are followed, the practical result is to have little fear of attack upon his pleading, even though that pleading should totally fail to inform his opponent as to the real points in issue. On the other hand, the very object of the Code is to compel parties to make clear the grounds upon which their right to recover, or their defense, is based. The lawyer who is well grounded in the rules of pleading will surely have the advantage in litigation. The constant study of this valuable work, familiarity with the rules set forth in it, and with the decisions enforcing and interpreting these rules, cannot fail to make one a good pleader.

SPECIAL OFFER—To those who buy both books at once, we will sell Pattison's Pleading Form Book (Price, $5.00) if ordered within the next 30 days for $4.00 additional, thus offering the two works, giving all there is to be said about Pleading in Missouri.

In one order, Prepaid for $10.00.

Gold in the Black Hills.
The Burlington Route has recently issued a 48 page booklet bearing the title "Mines and Mining in the Black Hills." The book is one which should be read by every mining man in Colorado. It gives more information about the mines of the Black Hills than has ever before been placed between two covers. A copy will be mailed free on application to the undersigned.

The Black Hills need Colorado men and money. Several of the shrewdest men in this state have already invested heavily in the Hills. The results so far have been more than satisfactory. The completion of the Burlington's new line to the Northwest brings the Black Hills within a night's ride of Denver. You can leave Denver tonight and be in Deadwood or Lead City tomorrow afternoon.

RED HOUSE ON THE HILL.

When the light is gently fading,
And the busy day is o'er,
I put down my work of knitting,
And I close my eyes to sleep.
Then I take a quiet journey
To the land of long ago,
See once more the dear old faces
Of the loved I used to know.
With what cheer they come to greet me
In the twilight soft and still,
As I reach the dear old homestead—
Little red house on the hill!

Hand in hand we walk together
Up the path that winds through
Beds of blossoms, bright and fragrant,
Laden with the evening dew.
Here and there I stop to listen
To some mother bird's soft peep
From a nest where little birdlings
Have not yet learned to sleep.
And the tall trees nod their welcome,
As I pass across the sill.
Of that home where love enfolds me—
Little red house on the hill!

From those windows facing eastward,
From those windows facing west,
I can see the pleasant valley,
See the mountain's wooded crest.
And across the fields in silence,
Pointing heavenward the spire
Of the church where I used to
Sing soprano in the choir.
The brook winds through the meadow
On its journey to the mill.
O what beauty lies about the hill—
Little red house on the hill!

When the darkness softly deepens,
And the evening lights are lit,
I return from the sweet visit,
Bustle again I knit.
While the children wait their prattle
Gather close about my chair,
Knowing not that loving Grandma,
Has been far away somewhere.
All the world for me grows brighter,
Sweetest peace my heart doth fill,
When I've been to the old homestead—
Little red house on the hill.

PAYING THE PRICE

By MRS. MONA PERKINS.

ROBERT HALLECK has returned," said Isabel Brenner from her cozy seat before the fire, where she sat, lovely and idle, among a group of busy ladies. It was the weekly meeting of "The Ladies' Aid Society," and most of the ladies in the little town of Dune were assembled in Mrs. Brenner's warm parlor that afternoon. They all looked up with surprised eyes at Isabel's words, for Robert Halleck had left Dune ten years before and no one had heard of him since.

"And have you seen him?" asked one of the ladies.

"No, not I," laughed Isabel. "But father heard it down just before dinner."

Isabel Brenner was the loveliest girl in all Dune, with rippling hair touched into gold by every sunbeam that danced to fall upon her, her wide gray eyes held all sorts of thrilling lights and shadows, and her complexion was fresh and fair with the palest of rose tints upon either rounded cheek. To the people of Dune she was synonymous with all that was fair and bright, yet she was unspoiled, and possessed a manner which inspired neither envy nor hate.

"Perhaps his return has something to do with Janet Wilson's absence this afternoon," remarked Mrs. Brenner. "She has not been absent for months until to-day."

"What would it matter to poor old Janet?" questioned Isabel.

"They were engaged to be married at the time he went away. Every one supposed he jilted her."

"Oh, then he is as old as Janet!"

"He is not so old, my dear. That was it. She must have been full 25, and he only a boy of 19. No one pitied Janet much, because she should not have encouraged him. A woman of her age should have known better."

Meantime, the subject of their conversation sat alone in her little parlor looking with weary eyes into the grate, where the fire had long since died out, leaving only colorless ashes. She was a tall, slender woman, with a fine olive complexion which alone seemed to have retained the beauty of youth. Great masses of almost snowy hair were gathered into a knot at the back of her well-shaped head, which even in her old age was held somewhat proudly, while the heavy folds of her loose, dark gown swept about her feet and lay in a lusterless heap upon the floor.

Mrs. Brenner had been right. Janet's absence from the Aid Society was due to Robert Halleck's sudden appearance in Dune. She had seen him get off the train at the station—Robert Halleck in the full vigor of manhood, tall, dark, handsome, with eyes that held heaven and earth once—not so very long ago—and yet an eternity to her.

She had felt the shock of his return like a thunderbolt, dazing and bewildering her for one brief moment, and then had come the realization that he had returned at last—the whom she had sought that she might in some way repay him the debt she had brought her. Dune said she had been to blame, that she had lured a boy—only a boy—who had wearied of her maternal charms at last.

A scornful smile flickered over her face at the thought. At 25 she had been beautiful in the rich, dark style of her southern ancestors—beautiful with jet black hair, magnificent eyes and a figure of perfect contour and grace. She knew, no one better, that the slender, dark-eyed boy whom she had loved without any effort of hers to lure him; that he had come into her life of his own free will, and gone, likewise, bearing away her wealth of love.

She remembered how she had scorned herself for loving a boy; how sorely her pride had been wounded when she pledged her troth to him, but she had loved him none the less.

Scrubbed Paper.
Made from ledger, linen, flat and book papers at 10 cents per pound at the New Mexican. This is scrub paper put up in pads and is less than the paper originally cost. Only a limited supply.

And he? Well, he went away one day and came no more. She had waited for his return and grown old in waiting.
His parents had been unfeignedly glad, for they had always objected to her, not even relenting when the glad light went from her eyes and the snow spread so thickly over her magnificent hair.

Now, he had returned a young man—she had become an old woman in appearance. But he should pay the price of her youth and hope. No man should rob her of both with reckless hand and leave her to bear the pain and humiliation alone. Perhaps Dune had wounded her above all else when it said she had thrown herself at this boy to win him; perhaps it had helped to harden her into the stern, relentless woman she had become. At any rate, he had returned, he must pay the price.

It was almost dark when she arose to pull down the curtains, light the lamp and rekindle the fire, yet even in the semi-darkness, the unwonted brilliance of her eyes, and the firm, set curve of the lips were perceptible, and they boded no good to Robert Halleck. Spring came and went, then summer burst in full glory upon Dune, and still Robert Halleck lingered. A rumor went over the town that Isabel Brenner's face was the charm that chained him there; later, their engagement was announced.

Janet had aged perceptibly since his return, and she stood away altogether from the Aid Society, not even going out upon the street except in the dusk of the evening, fearing, with something of a wild terror, that she might meet him, yet hungering for a sight of his face with passionate longing. But face to face with him she might weaken, might turn from her purpose.

The golden summer weeks crept slowly by for her, so slowly that she wondered how she could endure the long "afterward," if it crept like the time of waiting. Nights, when the moon hung like a silver bow in the sky, when the wind sighed softly through the trees, and all else was silent and hushed, she walked the length of her room saying again and again to herself that he should pay the price.

The semi-madness that crept over her weary brain while she waited and brooded over her wrong seemed to her like the spirit of her ancestors hovering over her to arouse her to action, for the Wilsons had never died with a wrong unavenged, and she was Wilson, with all their passionate blood coursing through her veins.

The waiting came to an end at last. The announcement of Robert Halleck's engagement was the signal for Janet's action. His happiness, now, depended upon the beautiful girl he had chosen from Dune, even as her's (Janet's) had depended upon him. He had robbed her, she would in turn rob him. If she were bereft, so must he be; if the light of her life had gone out, even so must his. She thought of it night and day with a thirst for revenge that knew no bounds.

It was a moonlight night with a gentle breeze stirring the trees, letting the moonbeams ripple through them in little dashes—and, throwing a shawl around her, Janet stepped out into that glory of moonlight and rippling leaves, casting a long, dark shadow upon the ground as she moved, heedless of the soft beauty around her. She had reckoned well, for when she stepped noiselessly among the shadows of the trees in the Brenner grounds she saw Robert and Isabel walking together a little way beyond her.

Isabel's beauty was ten-fold in the soft moonlight, yet the sight of it did not add a pang to the miserable woman who watched it with wild bright eyes. In the strange, mad passion of Janet Wilson, there was no jealousy of Isabel's fair, girlish face. The face would be the means of her vengeance, for men worship a woman with a face like that.

Isabel's voice reached her ears, clearly, distinctly. She was saying:

"Are you sure you love me as much as you did Janet Wilson?"

"A thousand times more," came Robert's fervent reply.

Neither moonlight nor sunlight could rival the light in Janet's sunken eyes as she listened with bated breath to what was bitterest pain to hear. Something flashed like the shimmer of tempered steel in her eager hand, but she waited, she knew not why.

"Did you really love her, Robert?"

"Love her? Yes, with the wild, headstrong love of youth. Why, darling, I remember to have awakened in the night crying aloud for her. That was when I first loved her. She fascinated me, then, and—yes, I loved her. I probably would have been happy with her had she left me alone. She was terribly handsome."

Janet's hand trembled upon the knife she held, a quiver went over her face, but she stood still as a statue and as cold.

"You know everyone says that she encouraged you, lured you on—you, a mere boy, she a mature woman?"

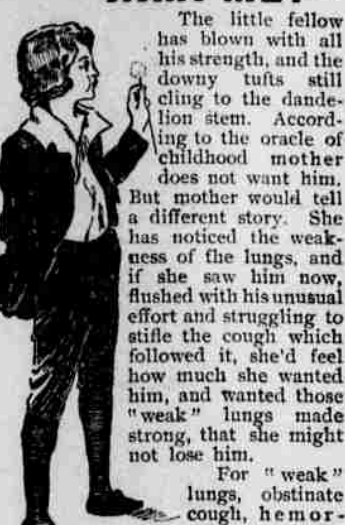

"In that she spoke falsely. I remember how she fought against her love for me. She would not yield at once that a boy had won her love. Truly, I do not care for her, now; the old love has given place to the better new, for, after all, we were ill-matched in years, but I will do her justice, at least."

The voices died away and Janet turned, with a sob, the old love mastering her. The man's happiness was as sacred to her as Heaven. She had been mad. He had loved her! For a moment a glorious thought, a wild, bright dream of happiness rushed over her. What if she should win him yet? Then, as if in mockery, a sudden, awful gust of wind cast a look of gray hair before her eyes, and in an instant the dream was ended. She was old and gray, and he was young—Minneapolis Housekeeper.

"DOES MOTHER WANT ME?"

The little fellow has blown with all his strength, and the downy tuft still clings to the dandelion stem. According to the oracle of childhood mother does not want him. But mother would tell a different story. She has noticed the weakness of the lungs, and if she saw him now, flushed with his unusual effort and struggling to stifle the cough which followed it, she'd feel how much she wanted him, and wanted those "weak" lungs made strong, that she might not lose him.

For "weak" lungs, obstinate cough, hemorrhage, weakness and emaciation there is no medicine so healing and so strengthening as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is especially valuable for children, building up weak bodies with sound, healthy flesh. It is entirely free from alcohol and narcotics.

"Winter before this, my oldest boy (who is now nearly five years old), had a terrible cough; he had it the whole winter and all summer," writes J. M. Parr, Esq., of Cameron, Severn Co., Pa. "Physicians did him no good and nothing my wife and I could do did him any good. After your 'Discovery' had cured my cough so quickly, when everything else failed, I wrote my wife to bring him back from the country, she having carried him there to see if the change would do him good. We were living in Savannah, Ga., at the time. She brought him back and after giving him your great Golden Medical Discovery for a time, he entirely recovered."
