The draft will be ready on Wednesday, when the American commissioners will present it in the form of articles other matters referred to in their last proposition, which are to be embodied in the final treaty. Only verbal discussions will be held then and it is expected that the treaty will be signed within two weeks from Wednesday.

DE MULES MURDERED.

He Was Shot and Killed at His Turquoise Mine.

Judge J. R. McPhee, who was at Las Cruces on a visit to his family, passed up the road last night on his return to Santa Fe. He stated that A. J. DeMules, the well-known turquoise miner of Las Cruces, was shot and killed yesterday morning in a controversy with a native citizen over an unsettled account.

The Associated Press account of the murder is as follows:

Denver, Nov. 29.—A special to the News from El Paso says: A. J. DeMules, better known as the "Turquoise King of the Jarillas," was murdered at his celebrated turquoise mine, fifty miles north of El Paso, Colorado, at Arizona, at 11 o'clock this morning by a Mexican with whom he had quarreled about a trivial matter. DeMules was shot in the back with a six-shooter while sitting breakfast and instantly killed. After killing DeMules the murderer attempted to escape, but was pursued and captured. A determined effort was made to lynch the prisoner by a large force of mine employees, but the Americans who had him in custody and several railroad men stood guard with Winchester and prevented mob violence.

MURDERER CAPTURED.

The Slayer of the "Turquoise King" is Jail at Las Cruces.

Special to the Citizen.

Las Cruces, Nov. 29.—Jacob Flores was brought down from Alamo Lake this morning by Deputy Sheriff Rogers and placed in the county jail here. Flores shot and killed A. J. DeMules, known as the "turquoise king," at the latter's camp in the Jarillas mountains, five miles from White Oaks, yesterday morning. The witnesses to the murder were Alex. Dilla, negro cook and a Mexican employee. Dilla testified before the coroner's jury that Flores came into the cabin where DeMules was seated at the breakfast table and demanded the wages alleged by Flores to be due him from DeMules. The latter denied owing Flores anything and Segna was horribly butchered. Three Mexican bandits have been arrested. Open threats are made by the white population for the organization of a vigilance committee to drive the entire Mexican population out or else resort to indiscriminate hanging. Weaver is the scene of the richest gold placer district in Arizona.

ORDERED HIM FROM THE CAMP.

Flowers Then Went to the Door and Turned Out to Tell to get out of his way, and pulling his revolver, a 44-caliber Colt's fired, at DeMules. The employee caught the gun and exclaimed, "Hold on, Flores," but the latter had blazed away, the bullet striking DeMules behind the right ear and passing out at the left side of his head. DeMules staggered to his feet and to the door of another room, but fell dead across the threshold.

A large crowd was at the local depot when Flores was brought here. I had a talk with the murderer through an interpreter after his arrival. Flores, who gave his age as 23, said:

"I worked for DeMules about a year. He owed me $20 in wages for over a month. Who I asked him for the money he said that he had given an order on a grocery store at Las Cruces to my parents, who live there, for the amount. This was not true. I did not intend killing him when I entered the cabin, but when I asked him for my wages he began to swear and storm around and ordered me to leave the camp. Though he had no weapon visible, I judged from his actions that he intended to kill me and so shot him first. I did not run away after shooting, but waited until some one caught hold and arrested me. Have been in the habit of sending money home when I could, and I told DeMules that my aged parents and five little brothers were actually in need, but still he refused to pay me. Yes, he owed others besides me," said Flores.

DeMules' body was taken to El Paso for burial. It is believed that he has relatives in New York, but no kin in the west. DeMules, who was a barber by trade, came to Las Cruces from Santa Fe ten years ago. He was very hard up at times. He heard of a turquoise discovery in the White Oaks country and went there to prospect. His friends say that while developing the mines he afterwards owned, he actually lived on roasted corn part of the time. At last he got capital interested and was worth between $5,000 and $20,000, and was in a position to realize a large fortune at the time of his death. DeMules, it is said, had been through a number of law suits since owning the mines, and at one time Flores appeared as a witness against him, but was still retained in his (DeMules') employ. Some people say that Flores was in the habit of refusing to pay his workmen their full wages, but others deny this and say that Flores was a constant disturber. Both men have some friends here, some who criticize the murderer severely and others who say that he should have had his money. Flores statement that his "case" was actually hungry and dependent on him for support to both affirmed and denied.
