According to the Dec. 7 issue of El Financiero International, federal legislators from Mexico's three major political parties threatened to call for impeachment of Attorney General Ignacio Morales Lechuga for a report that exonerated the state-run oil company PEMEX in the sewer explosions in Guadalajara on April 22, 1992. A spokesperson for the Attorney General's Office said the government's final investigation found no evidence the oil leakage that caused the explosions was the result of negligent storage, sabotage or an illegal disposal of oil. Instead, the Attorney General placed blame on the San Pablo construction company, which laid the pipes that leaked oil into the city's sewer system.
