According to a recent issue of the magazine America Economica, many foreign investors consider Mexico to be one of the two most "comfortable" countries for investment in Latin America. The magazine, which surveyed entrepreneurs attending the Conference of the Americas in New York in December, gave Mexico an overall rating of 3.33 out of a possible high of 5.0. Chile received a 3.35 rating. By individual category, Mexico received ratings of 3.97 for political risk and 3.36 for quality of workforce, but only 2.66 for infrastructure quality. Chile, Brazil, Venezuela and Argentina all received higher infrastructure ratings than Mexico. Mexico received a higher overall rating than Argentina, Colombia, Brazil, Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru. (Source: Notimex, 01/04/93)
