Lullaby

dust slowly
dust slowly dust slowly gathers gathers grows grips the surface gleamless grayly spurns sunlight spurns wonder copies color claims top more than sides more than under dust slowly
slowly dust gathers grows gleamless slowly slowly
dust

October Pantomime

Fall has set the stage with Dionysus for a tragedy. Behind the wings, a crippled russet leafing the calendar, swings a pendulum—the play begins.
Winds limp about to cue the cast.

First on fragile strings, a dragonfly planing amber air in quest of acorns, trapezes under the glare of autumn. One twang, and fractured is a brittle prow; on the proscenium lies a splinted hull.

Act two opens. A crusty bow, and upstage tumble mummied weed and panicle of goldenrod, until the tangled strands of the corymbs crouch into a guise of sculptured vermicule.

—Sister Mary Honora, O.S.F.

Aqueduct

Let it stand
A stone guest
In an unhospitable land,
Its speech, the well’s speech,
The unsealed source’s, Carrying thence
Its own sustenance. Its grace Must be the match
Of the stream’s strength,
And let the tone
Of the waters’ flute Brim with its gentle admonitions the conduit stone.
