THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO SCHOOL OF LAW

ACCREDITATION

The School has met the standards of the American Bar Association and of the Association of American Law Schools. The School has been fully accredited since 1948.

AIMS AND METHODS

Lawyers who function in their profession, whether as private practitioners or public servants, are an integral part of the system by which a democratic society governs itself. If they are to properly discharge the responsibilities of this role, their education for the profession must be broad and intensive. In its breadth, that education must encompass a full understanding of and belief in the democratic respect for individual personality and the democratic processes designed to allow individuals to develop and participate in a free, self-governing society. In its intensification it must impart a high degree of competence in the craftsmanship of the law-in those skills and insights essential to an adequate performance of the lawyer's function as advocate, judge, legislator, teacher, administrator, or civic leader. Such education neither begins nor ends in the law school, and the School of Law is continually concerned not only with its own curriculum but also with the quality of pre-legal education and with the continuing self-education that should be pursued by all members of the profession. Consequently, students are urged to enter the School with as broad a cultural and educational background as possible. Accordingly, the basic requirement for admission is now a baccalaureate degree from an approved college or university. The student will spend the equivalent of six semesters of study in the School of Law in courses designed to bring the teachings of history, philosophy, and the social sciences to bear upon the solution of legal problems and to develop the skills and insights essential to research, analysis, synthesis, criticism, and exposition. Due to the low ratio of students to teachers (fewer than 15 to 1), substantially more individual and small group work is possible in the School than in most law schools. The isolation of scholars in various fields concerned with resources problems continues to be a principal impediment to progress . . . . [R]esources problems are so complex that traditional lines of approach prove inadequate . . . . Rarely do we find the work of the lawyer and the non-lawyer appearing side by side . . . . The primary function of the [new] Journal is to meet this need . . . .

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The 2017-2018 editorial board of the Natural Resources Journal extends our appreciation to all the authors, staff, and supporting faculty and advisors for their work and guidance in publishing Volume 58. It has been an honor for us to work with all of you and to contribute to the Journal's long history of publishing insightful and thought-provoking articles on some of the most pressing environmental and natural resources issues we face.

The editorial board would like to thank this year's staff for their timeliness and attention to detail throughout the editing process. Thank you to our editorial board members for their thoughtful edits and contributions to each article. Special thanks to John Morseau and Timothy Piatt, who stepped up and picked up duties and responsibilities above and beyond what was asked of them. Their sharp attention to detail and mastery of the Bluebook ensured that we published the highest quality articles.

Also, this year we were fortunate to bring one of the contributing authors in this issue to our campus as a featured speaker. Special thanks to Dr. Atieno Mboya from Emery Law School, for coming to speak about human rights and feminism in the context of international climate change policies.

The Journal has the privilege of being led by our faculty advisor, Professor Cliff Villa. His energy and passion for environmental issues, both in and out of the classroom, inspire us to work harder and think deeper. Thank you for believing in us and allowing us the freedom to have full control over the Journal.

Lastly, thank you to our dedicated readers. Your support for the Journal ensures that we continue the strong and proud legacy of more than 60 years of advancing the discourse on environmental and natural resources issues.
