But He Knew Me

Frances Eleonore Schluneger

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq

Recommended Citation

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by the University of New Mexico Press at UNM Digital Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in New Mexico Quarterly by an authorized editor of UNM Digital Repository. For more information, please contact disc@unm.edu.
Who's to recall, excepting in the mind:
The sly, deceiving mind, so like the weather,
Mercurial, ambivalent, even blind —
Not to be trusted one day to another.

Are you the same or different, my darling?
I cannot tell. My eyes of mind, I vow,
Tell nothing, only that you're here, my darling,
And same or different, mine, at least for now.

FRANCES ELEONORE SCHLUNEGER

BUT HE KNEW ME

I walked into the wintery fields
Between the dusk and dark—
The dog that died walked by my side,
But none could hear him bark,
And none descry him there but I
Who went with loneliness...

How often must the heart preclude
The entrance of despair,
And find its ease in fantasies
Too intimate to share,
Or take a wraith and call it faith,
And so by faith progress!

I wandered through the countryside
When suddenly there came
A strange lost dog in wind and fog—
I could not call his name,
But he knew me, and joyously
And proudly walked me home.