On Nov. 1, presumed rebel commandos used bazookas in an attack on the San Carlos barracks in San Salvador. According to witnesses cited by Notimex, the missiles hit an automobile traveling on the street, resulting in serious injuries to the driver and a woman selling fruit on a nearby sidewalk. The San Carlos barracks, located in northern San Salvador, has been attacked at least three times this year. No one has claimed responsibility for the attack. Government officials said rebel commander Helena Fuentes led the attack. (Basic data from Notimex, 11/01/89)
