On Jan. 6 in Managua, Sen. Christopher Dodd (D-Conn.) told reporters that he agrees with UN observers who say the Nicaraguan elections are going smoothly, with only a few problems. At the close of a two-day visit, Dodd said he visited the northwestern part of Nicaragua, "where everything is developing normally and with police vigilance." Dodd met with the president of the Supreme Electoral- Council, and Violeta Chamorro's running mate, Virgilio Godoy. He did not meet with any government officials. The senator said he is planning to spend at least a week in Nicaragua in February to observe the elections. (Basic data from AP, 01/06/90)
