On Jan. 21 in Washington, the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) reported that a special mission will soon arrive in San Salvador. At present, the IDB is considering a two-year US$500 million loan package for the country's economic reconstruction. According to estimates prepared by the Salvadoran government, about US$1.8 billion are needed over the next five years for rebuilding infrastructure and other elements of the productive apparatus destroyed during the 12-year civil war.
