INDIAN RAIDS IN MEXICO

Indian Raids on ranches and settlements in northern Mexico have been reported to the United States government.

The Indians, according to reports from settlers and government officials, have been raiding ranches and settlements in the border area of Mexico, attacking and destroying property, and carrying off livestock. The raids have been particularly severe in the provinces of Chihuahua and Sonora, where the Indians have been known to have been active for many years.

The government has sent out a number of expeditions to investigate the matter and to try to put down the raids. So far, however, the Indians have continued to carry on their raids, and the situation is said to be serious.

Pursuing the Chinese

A German Expedition Captures Chinese Farm Over a Hundred Miles North of Peking.

Many Knaps Guns Seized

An expedition of German soldiers, under the command of General von Schlieffen, has captured a Chinese farm over a hundred miles north of Peking. The German soldiers were engaged in a fighting operation against the Chinese, who had been raiding German territory. The Chinese had been using the farm as a base of operations.

After the Capture

The German soldiers have taken possession of the farm and are now using it as a base of operations. The Chinese, who had been using the farm as a base of operations, have been driven out.
