On Feb. 17 in Havana, Pedro Miret member of the Cuban Communist Party politburo told participants at an international conference on informatics that the government is prepared to enter into partnerships with foreign electronics companies. When the Eastern bloc common market (COMECON) collapsed in the 1980s, Cuba lost most of its markets for electronics products. "Informatica 92" is comprised of the International Congress of Artificial Intelligence, the 5th Latin American Congress of Automatic Control, and several other organizations. Representatives of 120 companies from 11 countries are participating in the third international informatics fair held in Havana. (Basic data from Inter Press Service, 02/17/92)
