On Feb. 27 in Buenos Aires, Argentine and British officials commenced three days of talks to discuss the possibility of joint oil exploration and production in the Malvinas (Falklands) islands. The talks are focused on implications of legislation by both nations related to the continental shelf. The seven-member British delegation is headed by the Foreign Office's assistant undersecretary of state for America Adrian Beamish. (Basic data from Agence France-Presse, 02/27/92)
