On April 1, the Agence France-Presse cited unidentified experts in Havana as saying that the North West Canadian (NWC) company and the Swedish firm Torus recently finalized oil exploration contracts with the Cuban government. The Canadian company signed three contracts: off-shore platform in the Cardenas basin located off the northern coast, 130 km. east of Havana, and two others on land. One of the latter involves taking over operations at an existing exploration site. Torus is to carry out exploration activities in southern Camaguey province. Negotiations for similar contracts are underway with the Brazilian state-run oil company Petrobras. (Basic data from Agence France-Presse, 04/01/92)
