FAST INFO

Have a question? Ask it at http://fastinfo.unm.edu and we’ll try our best to answer it here.

Question: I think I’ve finished my courses and can graduate next semester, so is there anything I need to do?

Answer: Graduation is not automatic. You’ll need to pick up a graduation application from the front desk at the Advisement Center and complete the process by following the checklist on the front page. You will need to attach your most current resume as well as an unofficial transcript. If you have any transfer coursework that you completed concurrently with your Anderson classes, you’ll need to attach an official transcript from that institution if UNM doesn’t already have it on file. You will need to turn in your application by the appropriate deadline: July 1 for fall graduation, November 1 for spring graduation, and April 1 for summer graduation. When you turn in your application, you’ll schedule a graduation appointment with your advisor so your remaining coursework can be reviewed in person and you can ask any questions you may have. Once your application is processed, you’ll receive information about how you receive your diploma and participate in commencement.
