Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nm_anthropologist

Recommended Citation
Anthropology, Department of. "Front Matter." New Mexico Anthropologist 2, 1 (1937): 1-3. https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nm_anthropologist/vol2/iss1/1
This volume was reprinted from an original provided by the University of New Mexico General Library.

KRAUS REPRINT

A U.S. Division of Kraus-Thomson Organization Limited
Printed in U.S.A.
Table of Contents

Editorial .................................................................................................................. 3
The Status of Anthropology in the Western United States
By Donald D. Brand ................................................................................................. 4
  Introduction ............................................................................................................. 4
  Departmental Organization .................................................................................... 5
  Fields Covered ........................................................................................................ 7
  Archaeology ........................................................................................................... 8
  Ethnology and Ethnography ................................................................................ 8
  Trends and Special Opportunities ........................................................................ 9
  Museums, Libraries, and Publications ................................................................ 10
  Faculties ................................................................................................................ 14
Excavations at San Diego Mission, New Mexico
By Joseph H. Toulouse, Jr. ...................................................................................... 16
The Navajo Sweat House. By Gordon B. Page .................................................... 19
Calendar of Eastern Pueblo Festivals, September to December
By John M. Goggin .................................................................................................. 21
News
  Physical Anthropology .......................................................................................... 23
  Personal .................................................................................................................. 25
  Ethnology .............................................................................................................. 26
  Necrology ............................................................................................................. 28
  Archaeology .......................................................................................................... 28

Published by
Department of Anthropology
University of New Mexico
Bi-Monthly, Except June-July—Five Issues Yearly
Single Copies, 35c—Year, $1.25
Volume II
Number 1
September-October, 1937 Whole Number VII
THE STAFF

DONALD D. BRAND --------------------- Editor-in-Chief
DOUGLAS OSBORNE --------------------- Managing Editor
ROBERT LISTER ------------------------ Assistant Editor
CAROLYN MILES ------------------------ Assistant Editor
JAMES SPUHLER ------------------------ Business Manager
GORDON PAGE -------------------------- Draughtsman
JOHN M. GOGGIN ----------------------- Indian Ceremonials

All contributions, news, or requests for information should be sent to Douglas Osborne, Managing Editor of the NEW MEXICO ANTHROPOLOGIST, University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, New Mexico, and all subscriptions to James Spuhler, Business Manager, at the same address.

OUR COVER DESIGN

This design was drawn for the cover by Gordon Page, the staff artist. As can be seen by anyone familiar with Southwestern mythology or design, the two large serpent figures facing one another are the Awáñyu or lightning serpents of the Pueblos. They are of the type so frequently seen on modern San Ildefonso pottery. Above them, in the corners, are the Pueblo raincloud symbols. The decorative bar below the lettering finishes and balances the design.
EDITORIAL

It is with mingled feelings of misgiving and optimism that we salute the anthropological horizon with this latest in the field of publications dealing with the science of man. We are earnest in our desire for support, both financial and in the form of contributed material, from the world in which we hope that our paper may find a not too inconspicuous place; we want even more sincerely that that support, and place, be thoroughly merited.

We believe that we can merit support and that it will be unnecessary for us to return to mimeographing, our first medium. Our policy, we believe, is understood: we solicit, in the first place, work from students who are young and as yet unknown in the field. We hope in that way to bring much valuable work to light. We want, on the other hand, studies by men and women already in the field professionally to temper the work of those of us who are younger.

Our thanks go to those who have helped us in any way in the past and especially with this issue. For the support of our increasing number of subscribers we are thankful.

D. O.