Haight-Ashbury Abandoned...

(Covered faces poses)

If you thought the 60's were a time of peace and love, you might be surprised to learn that there are still some people out there who are NOT in favor of the peace movement. These people, who call themselves the Haight-Ashbury Abandoners, believe that the peace movement is a waste of time and money.

They say that the peace movement is not making any real progress. They believe that the only thing the peace movement is doing is隔助ing the Commies.

The Haight-Ashbury Abandoners claim that the peace movement is not doing anything to address the real issues of our time, such as poverty, crime, and unemployment. They believe that the peace movement should focus on these issues instead.

The Haight-Ashbury Abandoners also believe that the peace movement is not inclusive enough. They say that not everyone is truly committed to the peace movement, and that some people are just using it as a means to an end.

The Haight-Ashbury Abandoners are a small group, but they are vocal and they are making their presence felt. They are even holding rallies and protests to get their message across.

Several hours after the invitation to the Sugar Bowl was extended, the Wyoming athletic director accepted the offer. According to Bob Candelaria, the nationally favored team is New Orleans.

Wyoming has won 14 games in a row, including the Rose Bowl. The Sugar Bowl marks the first time that any WAC team has been invited to one of the four major post-season bowl games.

The Cowboys are coached by Eddie Robinson, who has a history of success in bowl play.

In the five years since the Sugar Bowl was created, three of the four WAC schools—Arizona State, Wyoming, and Colorado State—have appeared in the bowl. The only WAC team to appear in the Sugar Bowl previously was Arizona State in 1964.

Eddie Robinson has agreed to coach Wyoming's team. Coach Lloyd Eaton said the Cowboys have a better chance to win the Sugar Bowl than the WAC teams did in the past.

The temperature in New Orleans is expected to be about 70 degrees.

The weather conditions here will determine how long the Cowboys remain at home before playing the game. Wyoming is used to its winter climate. The temperature in New Orleans usually is above 70 degrees.

The town of El Paso, Texas, has a population of about 40,000. The city is known for its mild winter climate.
