DEBATING TEAMS SELECTED FOR THREE DEBATES

Bruce, Brorein, Threlkeld, McCanna, Timmons and Walker Will Compose 1916 Debating Squad, and Represent Varsity In Three Big Debates.

THE MEN ARE HARD AT WORK

With the first big intercollegiate debate of the year less than a month off, and the other two debates following in quick succession, the coaches have deemed it expedient to pick the three teams without the time-taking process of a tryout.

The debate with the State College will be held here on the third of March. On that date Bruce, Brorein and Threlkeld of the University will lock horns with Wharton, Rhea and Buevens of the State College over the compulsory arbitration question. The Varsity has won this annual debate twice in the past two years; but previous to that time the Aggies had won five successive times, and they will undoubtedly make every effort to break the Varsity's winning streak when the two teams clash on the third of next month.

This debate is considerably less than a month off now which means that the men have got to settle down to real business. The next three weeks are weeks that will have to count, in order to insure a team that can successfully resist the attack of its opponents.

The teams that will meet the two California college teams have also been practically selected. The team that will meet the University of Southern California will be composed of Brorein, McCanna, or Bruce. The latter choice depending upon the amount of work each can get in for qualification. The team selected to meet Redlands is composed of Walker and Timmons.

GIRLS OF BASKETBALL SQUAD WILL BANQUET

The Basketball Squad Will Celebrate State Championship Victory at Alvarado on Thursday Evening.

The girls' basketball team of the University will be tendered a banquet at the Alvarado Thursday evening by the captain of the team, Miss Thelma Loudon.

The object of the "feed" is to celebrate the recent victory of the girls team over the Aggie girls team. This victory brought home to the U. N. M. the state championship in girls' basketball. This is the first year in the history of basketball at the U. N. M. that the girls have won a championship, and in view of the fact that basketball is the only athletic activity in which girls can compete with other teams representing other institutions the recent victory is worth celebrating.

VARSITY DIVIDES HONORS EVENLY WITH AGGIE TEAMS

Girls' Quintette Gains Brilliant Victory Over Aggie Five, Establishing a Stronger Claim to State Basketball Championship; While Boys' Team Meets Defeat by a 3-Point Margin Before the Aggie Contenders.

The Varsity girls strengthened their claim to the state basketball championship by a 29-18 victory, and the boys lost their advantage 37-34 in games with the Aggies at the Armory Friday night.

The girls played a fast game. The ball was kept the majority of the time on Varsity's side of the center which proves that the guards and centers deserve credit along with the forwards for the victory. The Aggie forwards made some spectacular shots but the Varsity guards allowed them few opportunities to get near the goal. This game was Varsity's from the start and was won by superior team work. The refereeing was fair to all concerned and the game was comparatively clean. Considering this victory over the Aggies, their victory over the Silver City five, and the fact that they have not yet been defeated, the varsity girls have an excellent claim to the state basketball championship.

The Farmers got the jump on the Varsity boys the first half and caged four or five baskets before the Cherry and Silver team were able to score. Wigley was able to play only the first few minutes and Upton was substituted. The Varsity team was taken completely off its feet by the strength of the Aggies and at the end of the first period the score stood 23-14 in the latter's favor. In the second period, with a change of goals, the Varsity regained its speed and in a very few minutes made up the deficiency in the score and forged ahead. From then on to the final whistle first the Varsity was ahead and then the Aggies. The house was on its feet and the cheering was deafening. As fate would have it the whistle blew when the Varsity was three points behind and her hopes for a clear title to the state basketball championship were crushed. Some attribute superior team work to the Aggies and superior ability in basket shooting to the Varsity. The truth is that the teams were pretty evenly matched. Varsity offers no excuses. The Aggies won fairly and to them the credit is due. The fact, however, remains that two of Varsity's regular men were unable to play and their places were filled by substitutes.

The Aggies, both boys and girls, are good clean sportsmen and Varsity is able to appreciate this in victory or defeat.

Score of girls' game.

LATIN-AMERICAN TRAINING NEEDED SAYS PROF. HILL

Head of New Department of Latin-American Training to Lecture Throughout State in Spanish and English on "Opportunity in Education."

At the invitation of Hon. J. V. Gallegos, county superintendent of schools, Prof. Roscoe R. Hill, head of the University's department of Latin-American Training, is visiting all the larger towns and schools of Guadalupe county during this week. He began at Fort Sumner Friday and Saturday, with the meeting of the Guadalupe County Teachers' Association. Professor Hill will speak successively at many other points in the county; the arrangement of the schedule being in the hands of the county superintendent.

Professor Hill is speaking in both English and Spanish at the majority of the places, and his subject in all cases is "Opportunity in Education." Professor Hill is a fluent speaker in the Spanish language of which he has obtained the fullest mastery through years of residence in Spain and the Latin-American countries, and he knows the history and traditions of those countries as thoroughly as he knows the language. Already familiar with the history of New Mexico when he came to take charge of the work here, Professor Hill since coming to the state to make his home, has become an enthusiast over the opportunities for the educated young men of New Mexico who already know the Spanish language as their native tongue.

Very few people in the United States understand fully the opportunities that are presented to young men in almost all vocations in the Latin-American countries and in this country, in the various branches of commerce dealing with those countries. Education to fit the young men of New Mexico to take advantage of those opportunities is the aim of this new department of the University.

VESPER SERVICES WELL ATTENDED

Very Interesting Address by the City Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

The splendid weather that has prevailed for the past week gave an excellent opportunity for visitors to come from the city, as well as proving a tempting deterrent for students to forget their books and magazines, Sunday afternoon; so it happened that the vesper services were exceptionally well attended. But the agreeable nature of the weather was not the only reason for the good audience; for Mr. Benning, the president of the city Y. M. C. A., who has recently arrived at Albuquerque from Fort Scott, Kansas, was the speaker for the afternoon.

Mr. Benning's theme was "Prayer." He mentioned the great men whose birthdays occur in February, (Continued on page 4)

"HOW ARE YOU EDUCATED?"

In a recent address to his students a professor at the University of Chicago, said he would consider them educated if they could answer yes to every one of the following questions:

Has education given you sympathy with all good causes and made you espouse them?

Has it made you public spirited?

Has it made you a brother to the weak?

Have you learned how to make friends and keep them?

Do you know what it is to be a friend yourself?

Can you look an honest man or pure woman in the eye?

Do you see anything to love in a little child?

Will a lonely dog follow you in the street?

Can you be high-minded and happy in the meanest drudgeries of life?

Do you think that washing dishes and hoeing corn just as compatible with high thinking as piano playing or golf?

Are you good for anything yourself?

Can you be happy alone?

Can you look out on the world and see anything but dollars and cents?

Can you look into a mud puddle by the wayside and see a clear sky?

Can you see anything in the puddle but mud?

Can you look into the sky at night and see beyond the stars?

Editor of The Weekly:

It's time to begin thinking about the annual U. N. M. play which the students give every year for the benefit of the athletic association. Dr. Clark has requested that all students who are interested in taking part in the play see him as soon as possible so that a meeting can be arranged for and a play selected. There are only twelve weeks of this semester left, including commencement week, but this is plenty of time to allow a sparkling good show to be produced. Last year "Going Some" was given and it was an enormous success as everyone who saw it will agree. The play for this year has not yet been selected, and as there is no permanent dramatic society at the University, everyone who is desirous of seeing a U. N. M. play staged this year would do well to see Dr. Clark and get things started. A notice to this effect has been posted on the faculty bulletin board for the past week, and, strange to say, no one has as yet manifested any interest in taking part. Can it be that the students do not want to give the annual play or are they just too modest?

Y. W. C. A. MEETING.

The next meeting of the Y. W. C. A. will be held at the home of Louise Lowber at 119 South High Street, Thursday afternoon at four o'clock. All members and alumnae members of the association are invited. The subject of the meeting will be "Grace H. Dodge, a Woman of Creative Faith," lead by Miss Helen Thacher. There will be a violin solo by Miss Kiekie. After the service there will be a social hour.

The University Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are planning a joint party in the near future. The affair is to be in the nature of an indoor track meet.

JUBILEE SERVICE.

The fiftieth anniversary service for the jubilee of the Young Woman's Christian Association was held last Monday evening at Hokona hall. The meeting was well attended and much enjoyed by the girls present. The service was lead by Miss Louise Lowber, with the address by Miss Annarrath Stewart, "To what hath the King called us?" Miss Alice Shreiber, the first president of the University Y. W. C. A., was present and gave a short talk about the association's activities at that time.

thy of even a greater celebration than that planned, a celebration in which the whole Varsity shows its appreciation of the meaning of the victory. The girls, however, do not intend to wait, or beg for such recognition, but will in this banquet show their own independence. There will be toasts and songs by the different team members in addition to the eats.

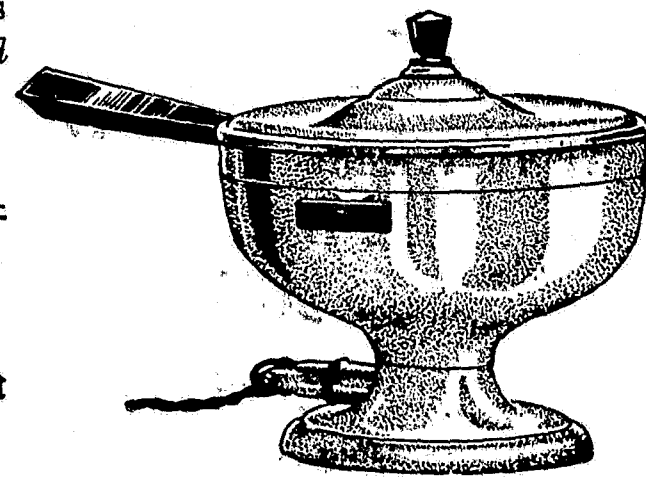

This will, we predict, become an annual affair in the years to come.

Chapter 3

About a quarter of a mile south of the cabin, where the river emerges from the little canyon, and begins a more placid journey to the plains, the road forks, one branch gradually turning to the west, the other leading abruptly east for a mile, then gradually taking a southerly direction.

The three officers, with their companion, made haste to reach the forks of the road, and took the branch going east. They proceeded a few hundred yards, more leisurely now, and, coming to an unusually forested spot in the trail, stopped their horses. In the trail, stopped their panting horses, while two of the number dismounted and went back up the road for a short distance.

"We are safe enough now, I reckon," said the officer, with a quick glance at the captain. The latter did not reply, but sat listlessly in his saddle. He had lapsed into the same frame of mind in which he had been when he said "I've almost decided to give up, anyway." But suddenly he straightened himself, determination written in his features. Two sentences had been burned into his memory—sentences that bind true men to their duty—the words of a woman, and the promise he had made: "I always believed you," and, "I will come back, I promise it."

His meditations were interrupted by the sudden appearance of the two privates.

"What's up?" said the officer.

"The devils are on our trail," replied the men. "They just passed up the road toward the cabin—several of them, in a hurry, too."

Instead of eliciting an exclamation of disappointment, this news was greeted by a low chuckle from the officer.

"Maybe the rubes think they can get ahead of an old dog at the business. Ha! Ha! By jove—but we've got to pull in a while, right here. You two make use of your legs. Take the shortest way you can, and get to the cabin in time to see which way they go. That woman—with a glance at the captain—"well, you never can tell."

The two disappeared in the darkness. The officer spoke a few words to his companion and they began to lead the horses through the thick growth of timber up a little hill on the right, finally emerging in a secluded spot at the head of a small arroyo.

The captain was puzzled. It was evident that he was also filled with anxiety. He trusted the judgment of his friend; yet what the outcome of their pursuers' visit to the old ranch house might be he could not surmise.

The officer went back to the road, awaiting the return of the spies. Presently they arrived, and the three went cautiously back to the captain and their horses.

"Tat makes things a lot better," said the officer, after he had been informed that the posse had taken the road to the mountains. "Did you see the woman?"

"No."

"Hear anything?"

"Yes. One of them mentioned something about women's lies, then another said, 'She needn't think we are so dense that we can't see through her little trick. She supposed we would believe she lied, so she told us he went up the mountain road, thinking that we would believe he went the other way. We will find him up there somewhere.'"

"It's up to us to reach the old cave by morning," remarked the leader of the quartette. "After that we will have clear sailing."

They lead their horses to the road, mounted them, and rode away in the darkness.

Meanwhile the sheriff and his companions proceeded to an open space in the forest near the level summit of the mountain. Realizing the uselessness of further search, they rolled themselves in their blankets to sleep until morning.

Long before sun-up the sheriff had aroused his men and they had breakfast. Then the group was divided into four parts, each having three men. A thorough search was to be made, each division being assigned a certain portion of the mountain. They were to form a semi-circle on the south side of the peak; each was to examine carefully his assigned territory, especially for traces of horse or man; the search was to end with a complete investigation among the rocks and caves in the cliffs on the north side of the mountain.

Early in the day tracks of a horse were found. These heightened the expectations of the men, and they were were certain of success. But when they happened upon two hunters about noon, who had come two days previously, and who reported they had seen no evidence of a fugitive, doubts began to fill the minds of the men. However, they continued their search, only to assemble about dusk with the knowledge of failure.

"Who is the woman?" asked the sheriff.

All were silent for a while. Then one ventured an explanation.

"I heard that some woman comes out here in the summer, and stays alone most of the time. Jim Bayne said she has been up here off and on for the last three summer."

"But this is October," said a third.

"Is he married?" asked a fourth.

No one responding, he continued: "She appeared to have been riding lately. Besides, it is not often that anyone with only slight acquaintance, or none at all, would lie for a fellow like she did. That sweater makes things look suspicious."

"You can't tell," said the sheriff. "He was supposed to be alone. But it would be an easy matter for his wife to take another route and finally land here, thinking to remain a while where they thought no one would find them."

And so the suspicions grew. After a hurried supper, the posse prepared to return down the mountain.

In the twenty hours that had elapsed since the officer and his two companions had interrupted Henrietta Ann's pleasant little romance, she had managed, with difficulty, to cook her meals, and, with the aid of an improvised crutch, even to carry a little water from the river. But the pain in her ankle grew more intense. Had it not been that she, too, remembered a sentence, one that had thrilled her—"I will come back"—she would have been most miserable. But even pain is a minor consideration when one is in the midst of an exciting adventure.

Henrietta Ann was busy trying to plan what she should do next, when the sound of galloping horses came from up the trail. The sheriff and his companions halted beside the cabin; the sheriff gruffly entered the door, and stood looking at Henrietta Ann, who had assumed a disinterested and care-free attitude.

"Where is that sweater that you had on your foot yesterday?" he began.

"I really have forgotten—you might look for it," she replied, sarcastically. "Oh, yes! Did you find him?"

The sheriff remained silent; her reply only aroused his suspicions the more; and when he noted the meager supplies in the house, and evidences of recent arrival, he was more convinced that Henrietta Ann was a conspirator with the man for whom they were hunting.

Going to the door he said to his companions: "Prepare to stay here all night. We shall leave tomorrow." Then turning to Henrietta Ann he said in a stern voice: "Madam, you are under arrest."

EXCELLENT PROGRAM RENDERED BY SOCIETY

not too long to hold the interest of the audience, and were all well given. Following the debate, Professor Bonnett made a few remarks as criticisms and suggestions to those who will appear on the programs.

The next meeting will be held in Rodey Hall next Tuesday at four o'clock. Everyone is welcome to at-

THE FUR SKIN-DE-CAT.

Knowing that you always are interested and open for an investment in a good live business proposition, we take the liberty of presenting to you what seems to us a most wonderful business, and in which, no doubt, you will take a likely interest, and perhaps write us by return mail the amount of stock that you wish to subscribe toward the formation of this company. The object of this company is to operate a large cat ranch in or near Golden, Colo., where land can be purchased cheap for the purpose.

To start with, we collect about, say, one hundred thousand cats. Each cat will average twelve kittens a year. The skins run from ten cents each for the white ones to seventy-five cents for the pure black. This will give us twelve million skins a year, to sell at an average of thirty cents a piece, making our revenue about ten thousand dollars a day, gross.

A man can skin fifty cats a day, for two dollars. It will take 100 to operate the ranch, and therefore the net profit will be about nine thousand eight hundred dollars a day. We will feed the cats on rats and will start a rat ranch next door. The rats multiply four times as fast as the cats. If we start with one million rats, we will have therefore four rats per day for each cat, which is plenty.

Now, then, we will feed the rats on the carcasses of the cats, from which the skins have been taken, giving each rat a fourth of a cat. It will thus be seen that the business will be self-acting and automatic all the way through. The cats will eat the rats and the rats will eat the cats, and we will get the skins.

Awaiting your prompt reply, trusting that you will appreciate this opportunity to get rich quickly, we remain, tend. It will consist of a plona solo by Miss Higgins, a reading by Miss Selsor, and a debate concerning immigration limitation. Mr. Gouin and Vincent have the affirmative.

There was once in this University a rule commanding all freshmen to wear green caps.

Have you seen it? If not, no doubt you have heard it. Anyway, it's on the campus and really it is one of the cutest little things that was ever painted red. Prof. A. W. HIAWATHA STORY IS BASED ON FACT Savant Asserts That Hero of Longfellow's Poem Was Not Entirely Mythical.

The story behind the writing of "Hiawatha," by Longfellow, and how this story is intertwined with the early history of Wisconsin tribes, was told by Dr. S. A. Barrett, curator of anthropology at the Milwaukee public museum, in a lecture there not long ago on the Indians in that state.

"Hiawatha was a real person, not wholly mythical, as so many readers of the poem have inferred," said Dr. Barrett. "He was a statesman and reformer among Mohawks living about 1750. With the help of a friend he evolved a plan to stop inter-tribal feuds among the New York tribes, presenting his proposal in the high tribunals of his nation.

"The law of the blood feud held that when a man of one tribe was killed by a member of another tribe the dead man's relatives must avenge the act by killing the murderer, or, if he could not be found, by killing some member of his family. This was very unjust as it resulted in the death of many innocent men, their only fault being that they were blood kin of the murderer.

"Hiawatha proposed that when a tribesman was killed the members of the tribe to which the murderer belonged should pay twenty strings of wampum, each a cubit in length—ten strings for the life of the slain man and ten strings to preserve the life of the murderer or the lives of his relatives.

The plan met the instant opposition of Atatarho, strong magician among the Mohawks. His influence was so powerful that the councils of the nation rejected the proposal. Then the quarrel between Hiawatha and Atatarho became personal and Atatarho brought about the death of Hiawatha's two daughter's.

"Hiawatha did not lose heart, but continued to advocate his plan. Finally the Onondagas accepted it, and through their acceptance he obtained its adoption by other tribes. An outgrowth of this was the founding of the league of the Five Nations, which made the Iroquois the most formidable Indians on the continent.

"As usual among primitive men, the long struggle between Hiawatha and Atatarho was given a supernatural turn. When the people saw that Hiawatha had triumphed they concluded that he possessed greater spiritual powers than his opponent. The qualities and characteristics of the dieties of the tribe were bestowed upon him, and in time he became the culture hero of his people.

"The legend of Hiawatha was handed down among the Iroquois, but it is probable that the great poem about his life would never have been written, most assuredly not with its present content, had it not been for the part played by a man who had been among the Indians of Wisconsin. Henry Schoolcraft, ethnologist, had lived for some time among the Chippewas and had taken a Chippewa squaw as his wife. He wrote an account of the legends among the lake tribes, among these stories being one in which the hero had experiences like those of Hiawatha."

Mr. Bennington related that recently, when the cabinet at Washington was about to deliberate upon an important foreign affair, President Wilson modestly suggested that the meeting would best begin with prayer for Divine guidance.

Mr. Benning's address was distinctly to university men and women. He said that if they expected to be a real power in the world, to live the fullest life possible, they should spend much time in communion with God.
