"EXCUSE ME" BIG HIT WITH TOWN PEOPLE

Sigma Tau Comedy is Conspicuous Success From the Standpoint of Amusement.

From the standpoint of amusement the comedy "Excuse Me," presented by the Sigma Tau fraternity of the University at the high school auditorium on Friday evening was a conspicuous success. A very light and entertaining comedy of an unusual type, the play was at the same time a very heavy one from the actor's point of view, especially for amateurs, but the boys of the fraternity took hold of the situation in a masterful way and the result was pleasing.

From the time that the curtain went up, a little too promptly, until the rousing rendition of the fraternity songs at the conclusion, the pure fun of the many ridiculous situations continually tickled the audience. The evanescent quality that goes by the name of "stage presence" was present in a remarkable degree for amateurs, if anything, a little too much assurance on the part of the actors leading to a loose and careless handling of good situations in places where the audience was entitled to see the best efforts of the actors put forth.

The half dozen parts representing female characters, were played by boys, were all well done. Their costuming and make-up was splendid, as were indeed the costume and scenic effects of the show in general. An unusually elaborate set of scenery representing the interior of a Pullman car, with seats, smoking room, and full accoutrements, was built by the boys for the occasion. The illusion of the interior of a train was skillfully carried out.

Musical specialties by Robert Sewell and the Sigma Tau quartet were thoroughly enjoyed, and the audience wished for more. A ten-piece orchestra under the direction of E. Stanley Seder, of the fraternity, was also thoroughly appreciated.

Taken as a whole, the handling of this difficult Henry W. Savage production reflected great credit on the local boys, and Elwood Albright, who directed the piece, is to be congratulated on his ability in handling amateur material. A big house greeted the players.

Following are the characters of the play in the order in which they appeared on the stage.

SERVICE—THE RELIGION OF COLLEGE MEN

IN MOST IMPORTANT ADDRESS OF COLLEGE YEAR, DR. CLARK OUTLINES THEOLOGICAL POSITION OF COLLEGE STUDENT IN COLLEGE WORLD.

"If I have a thesis to uphold it is this, that the religion of the college man is not one of form, of theology, of belief, but one of service," said Dr. Clark in his talk at vespers Sunday.

"Too often the average non-college educated observer sees but the dress of the college student, the loud joviality of his manner, and (as this observer terms it) the senseless enthusiasm of the college contest. This observer picks the exceptional, conspicuous student, who breaks the bounds of temperance, as his idea of the college man and then tells us that college students are a dissipated, immoral, worthless lot. I dare say that nearly every one of my hearers have heard this condemnation.

"Aside from the great error which such an observer makes, in letting the conspicuous exception become his idea of the class, he judges without having knowledge, as for example, he sees only the acrobatic cheer leader in, let us say Tom Jones, and knows not that this same Tom Jones is the most respected man in college, a leader in his classes and, perhaps, the head of the student senate, which governs all student conduct. Unless one has been a student and has mixed with students, his chances of rightly understanding the college man are poor indeed.

"In the days when the college Y. M. C. A. was synonymous with an organization for prayer meetings alone, it had but a very small membership, and its meetings were attended by its members only. I remember that day, when the college Y. M. C. A. started to get work for deserving students, when it saw to getting freshmen located in good rooms, when it undertook to organize hospital clubs and to have an interest in the sick, its membership grew by leaps and bounds. Once the college Y. M. C. A. appealed to but a few. With the mission of service to perform it appealed to all, and today we find that the leading athlete in college is frequently its president.

"The Intercollegiate Branch of the Y. M. C. A. has found that no more than 8 to 10% of the college graduates coming into cities join the churches. The reason assigned is the lack of opportunity for social work.

"Dr. Abbott gives us a very clear cut statement of the fact that the philanthropic side of religion is most appealing to the college man when he says:

"But college questions are not merely questions of theology or of spiritual experience. They are not less, possibly more, questions of service. What can I do for my fellow men? and how can I best do it? are paramount questions among these college men and women."

"In the years of college experience I have had a few come to me with the question, how to escape from some pit into which, through ignorance or some sudden burst of passion, they have fallen; but I have had hundreds come to me with the question: 'How can I best serve my fellow men, how best promote universal brotherhood?' and this counsel has been sought alike by men intending to go into the ministry, into law, into business, into teaching and into journalism.

"All of us have read of Herbert Hoover, so famous for his work of relief in Belgium. Hoover was nearly when help was needed and he helped. Soon he found himself giving his whole time to organization (Continued on page 4.)

U. N. M. TEAM PREPARED TO DEBATE SATURDAY

Men Trained to Minute With Speeches and Material Well in Hand—Speeches to be Printed.

With the date of the annual debate with the Aggies set for March fourth, the U. N. M. team composed of Threlkeld, Polk and Bruce, are making final preparations for the event.

The question to be debated here this year is, "Resolved, that federal and state legislation providing for compulsory arbitration is essential for the adjustment of disputes between employers and employees."

The final selection of the team was made last Saturday evening when the team composed Threlkeld, Polk and Bruce clashed with three other experts on the question, Prof. Bonnett, Feather and Brorein.

The three men selected have trained to the minute and have their speeches and material well in hand. The remaining days will be spent in arranging and classifying the material on the subject.

The trio have all had previous experience in this line of college activity. Bruce began to develop his oratorical and debating talent while attending Roswell high school, was a member in his freshman year at Kentucky University of the freshman debating team there, enrolled here for his sophomore year, and won the state oratorical contest, and was leader of the all New Mexico championship debating team of last year.

Threlkeld is a senior, coming here from Park College, Missouri, where he had three years experience in intercollegiate debate.

Polk took a prominent part in the Aggie debating tryout last year, and his ability, especially in rebuttal, is well known.

The Aggie team selected to oppose these men will be composed of Wharton, Rhea, and Buvens, all men of marked ability.

The judges for the contest have not yet been selected, there being three men to choose from a list of twelve.

The debate will be staged at the high school auditorium next Saturday evening, and a large crowd of students and town people are expected to be in attendance. This debate will open the debating season, and it will also be the first time in two years that the people of Albuquerque have had the privilege of hearing an intercollegiate debate.

Another interesting item in connection with this debate is the fact that Elbert R. Nichols, editor of the Intercollegiate Debate Series, has requested that both teams submit their speeches to him that they may be printed in the 1915-1916 volume of the Inter-collegiate Debate Series. This is to be considered a great honor in view of the fact that it will be the mean of putting the state of New Mexico on the intercollegiate debating map of the United States.

THE RAISING OF THE FLAG

Interesting Service Takes Place as Honor to Lincoln and Washington.

The anniversary of Washington's birthday was quite appropriately celebrated at the University by the raising of the American flag recently presented to the University by D. S. Rosenthal. Many town people as well as the students were in attendance, and the assembly hall was filled by those who came to hear the few patriotic speeches given before the flag was raised.

Honorable Amado Chaves, who has lived to see the development that the past half century has brought to New Mexico and its people, attributed this progress to the "coming of the American flag" and the American educational system that resulted. The subject of his address was: "What the Coming of the American Flag Meant to New Mexico."

Following Mr. Chaves, Dr. Thomas Harwood, a veteran of the Civil War and a pioneer in the early West, gave a few general remarks concerning patriotism and ended by pointing to

LIBRARY CLOCK PHILOSOPHY.

We noticed a clock in the library the other day. This particular clock was not running. It appeared to be an efficient clock; it had the inner mechanism; it had a compact and practical looking exterior. Nothing seemed to be lacking, and yet the clock was not performing its function. So is it with some of the students, they possess the mental mechanism, their appearance and bearing promises much, and yet they fail to perform their functions. Just as the clock is patiently awaiting the time when some one will set in motion its inner mechanism, transforming it from a useless decoration into an uncertain time piece, so are they waiting for some one to force activity upon them, to feed them pre-assimilated knowledge, and transform them from complacent idlers into reluctant students.

OUR IGNORANCE.

Of the thousands of graduates of American institutions every year, how few of them are well versed in good literature.

With all the modern conveniences of our colleges, few men in comparison with the total number of students are really acquainted with the masterpieces of literature.

Through literature we can become acquainted with the greatest writers and thinkers of every age. We all agree as to the broadening influence through the diversity of subjects considered, the stimulus and assurance which grows upon us as we read such works, and the moral lessons to be learned through the realms of classic literature.

A college man should be able to converse upon any author, his characteristics of style and his works.

We do not want to read only but think of what we read. Get into the spirit of the author. Learn to know, to analyze, to develop his thoughts.

PI KAPPA ALPHA BANQUET.

What promises to be a real social event is the P. K. A. banquet at the Alvarado this Friday. The most social part of it is that not only will the men be there but the evening will be brightened by the presence of that delightful element generally known as the feminine. This is the first time that a P. K. A. banquet has been graced by the fair sex but according to current comment it will not be the last. Formality will be the order of the evening. Accordingly every available dress suit at the U. N. M. or in the city of Albuquerque has been borrowed, stolen or rented. A few lucky dogs have one that they really call their own. Any how a good feed has been promised and there may be something else in addition. Maybe!

REFRESHMENTS AT THE CARNIVAL

Quite in harmony with the flags and patriotic bunting which decorated the armory for the athletic carnival, were colonial costumes of the young ladies of the Y. W. C. A. The girls had booths arranged under the balcony and throughout the evening dispensed home made candy, ice cream cones and punch. Miss Bernice Hamilton, Miss Mary Brorin and Miss Lulu Cooper charming in Martha Washington costumes and powdered hair, presided at the booths.

MISSIONARY MEETING OF THE Y. W. C. A.

Miss Prunella Duke was the leader of an interesting meeting of the Young Woman's Christian Association last Thursday afternoon. The foreign missionary work of the association was discussed, and a call to the great work to be done after the war was made.

RAISING OF THE FLAG.

ers of the American Revolution Dr. Evelyn Frisbie gave a short talk concerning that organization. The Sons of the American Revolution had as their representative speaker Geo. S. Klock. Mr. Klock gave as his attitude toward war the words of Grant: "I hate war." But nevertheless he pointed out the necessity for the present generation to prepare to protect that freedom and liberty which their forefathers fought to obtain.

After these addresses had been given, those in attendance moved from Rodey Hall to the flag pole on the campus, where the new flag was raised.

THE FRESHMAN VERSION

Chapter 5

Stealthily the two crept to the shed. Tom, taken by surprise, could not do as he was told. Henrietta Ann, still holding the two revolvers, issued commands like a general.

"Don't say a word or make a noise," she commanded, "saddle my horse and yours, put feed in the saddle bags and bring along that bag of provisions which you will find with my saddle. Luckily I told them to leave those provisions I brought yesterday out here," she thought.

Tom did as he was told, but in truth took a sheepish delight in this new turn of adventures.

Henrietta Ann listened intently for any sounds of movement about the house, but all was quiet.

"Get on your horse," she ordered, still covering the man with her gun. He obeyed with a guilty grin. Then Henrietta Ann climbed into her saddle, with some difficulty on account of the still painful ankle, and pointed to the road which led down the canon.

Tom understood the command and started off at a slow pace. The girl followed. Then went on in silence, quickening their pace as they left the cabin behind. It was near midnight when they reached the crossroads. Tom stopped his horse and Henrietta Ann came up beside him.

"Now Tom," said she, "you and I are two of a kind. We're both out for adventure and we don't care much how we get it. I've gotten into an awful mixup and I'm enjoying it scandalously. So I've made up my mind to see the end of the whole affair. Let's join forces."

Tom was really interested in this mysterious woman. Moreover she seemed a good sort and he liked her. He saw the chances of a story in this escapade and felt sure he could explain his seeming desertion to the officers.

"I'll do it," he exclaimed, "and here's my hand on it. You can bank on me every time, Miss. Now which road do we take?"

"This road to the south looks terribly venturesome; let's take it," she suggested. But to herself she said, "Yes, I'm sure this is the road he took."

So they followed the dark rough road for the rest of the night. It ran south for some distance, then turned east and began the ascent of a rocky canon. This ride with a strange man, in the middle of a dark night with an unknown destination was indeed a thrilling experience for the hum-drum Henrietta Ann. She was enjoying it to the fullest. Each turn around a dark boulder brought its new thrill and she conversed with her companion in the most awesome whispers.

As dawn came the road grew dimmer and dimmer until at last it turned into a winding trail. Neither Henrietta Ann nor Tom knew where it led but as the sun came up they could plainly make out the hoof-marks of horses.

"That means they took this road all right," she cried hopefully.

"They who?" burst forth the curious Tom. "I say, Miss, as long as you let me in on this adventure you might tell me what you know." So she told him all she knew of the affair, carefully concealing any sentimental interest she had in the rascally criminal.

After a short stop for breakfast they continued their way up the trail. Noon found them still following the tracks of the horses among the caves at the top of the mountain. At last they came to one larger than the rest. The party they had been following had left but a few hours before for the ashes were still warm. Henrietta Ann's eyes shone. In her excitement she had forgotten all about her injured ankle and the fatigue of her long ride. She was intent on overtaking her elusive friend. The thought of a pair of gray eyes which looked straight into her's when their owner proclaimed his innocence were ever before her and she would not rest until she had unraveled the mystery of this unknown army officer.

They set forth again, this time following the tracks down the mountain. Finally they struck a road which looked strangely familiar. Henrietta Ann became convinced that it was the very road which led by her cabin.

"Well, Tom, in the name of all that's queer, do you know what we have done? No? All our wondrous journey has merely led us 'round in a circle and in a short time we'll be back where we started."

Henrietta Ann's shoulders drooped, she felt miserably tired and her ankle hurt dreadfully. Was her gallant fugitive only playing a game or had she followed the wrong trail all along? Here she was all but in the hands of the very officers from whom she had escaped the night before.

"I might just as well have stayed arrested in the first place," she murmured; "it's worse than having one's arm broken twice but I suppose it will have to be done."

By dark they reached the cabin. But there were no officers waiting to arrest them. All was peaceful and quiet. A light shone from the window and smoke curled from the chimney. As they approached a manly form appeared in the doorway. In a moment he was by Henrietta Ann's side. Yes, it was the man with the gray eyes and bright smile. Henrietta Ann could scarcely believe her eyes.

"Oh! man, is it you? Where?—Who?—How?—Oh, everything!" she exclaimed. "What has happened?" "It's all right, girl," he assured her triumphantly and lifted her from the horse and carried her to a chair in front of the big blazing fire for all the world as if she had been a graceful, willowy heroine. She was speechless with amazement so the man proceeded:

"Well, to begin with, it was all just a badly joke. It began at the army post last week. I started out on a wager without money or a horse to find a girl who would just be a 'good pal.' I got into a mess with the police over a horse I borrowed without the asking and sent for the fellows to come up here and help me out of the scrape. You see how they did it. But it's all fixed up now. I returned the man's horse with a little present and satisfied the police somehow and now I'll tell you the best part. I found the girl."

Then Henrietta Ann understood. There was another girl.

"So you found the girl?" she repeated after him and could not keep the disappointment out of her voice. "Of course, I'm glad."

"You don't seem glad a bit," he answered, a twinkle in his eyes and a funny smile twisting the corners of his mouth.

She did not venture to meet his eyes, but went on to say, "Well, naturally not knowing her I couldn't just exactly—"

"Oh, you funny girl," he broke in. "She is you. Didn't I tell you I'd come back and haven't I been waiting here half a day for you? Why you're going to be my 'pal.' Yes, you are. Of course, your eyes say so."

So Henrietta Ann not only had an adventure but a romance of her own and Tom, the author, wrote it and his story became the "best seller" of the season.

"Too few know that the college men of the U. S. senate unseated Senator Lorimer on the charge of obtaining his place by bribery. The votes taken were not those of one political party for, and another against the unseating. Practically all the college men regardless of party united in voting for the right.

"To emphasize this new form of practical religion let me speak of the college woman. It has been said that not one college woman in twenty-five knows the essential doctrines of her own denomination, and that when asked what church she attends she replies: 'Whichever one I like best.' These facts have been lamented by some but the New York Christian Work diagnoses the case in a most hopeful manner as follows:

"Is the college woman religious? If you mean does she study creed, or dogma, or theology; no. But if by religion you mean, is she following in the footsteps of the Master Teacher, we gladly answer, yes, for we are told that Jesus of Nazareth went around doing good, and the college women in her busy, normal, every day life, is doing just that."
