Encounter

ENCOUNTER, edited in London by Stephen Spender and Melvin J. Lasky, is the most widely read monthly of its type in the world. In the words of one reviewer, "it is by far the most vital and immediate of the English literary magazines, and unique in the way it sees letters as being in the thick of affairs."

In 1959 so far ENCOUNTER has published articles by Bertrand Russell, R. H. S. Crossman, Arthur Koestler, John Kenneth Galbraith, Joseph and Stewart Alsop, W. H. Auden, F. W. Dupee, Harold Rosenberg, Thomas B. Hess, Edmund Wilson, Anthony Powell, Vladimir Nabokov, George F. Kennan, Malcolm Muggeridge, Dwight Macdonald, Marcus Cunliffe, C. P. Snow, Jack Kerouac, and many interesting writers of the younger generation. Subjects discussed have included Thomas Wolfe, Lolita, the Van Gogh letters, the Beatniks, Freud and Havelock Ellis, the Berlin crisis, history as literature, prostitution, trade unionism, Hollywood, and developments behind the Iron Curtain. There have been poems by Edwin Muir (his last), Philip Larkin and Robert Lowell, stories, and some hard-hitting correspondence.

With over 60,000 words in each issue, ENCOUNTER gives marvellous value at 75 cents a copy. Ask your book-seller about it (he can order through the Eastern News Co., New York) — or mail $7.50 for a year's postpaid subscription to ENCOUNTER, 25 Haymarket, London SW1 or British Publications Inc., 30 East 60th Street, New York 22.
