

1963

Canticle of Spring

Daniel Polsby

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq>

Recommended Citation

Polsby, Daniel. "Canticle of Spring." New Mexico Quarterly 33, 1 (1963). <https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq/vol33/iss1/14>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by the University of New Mexico Press at UNM Digital Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in New Mexico Quarterly by an authorized editor of UNM Digital Repository. For more information, please contact disc@unm.edu.

JOHN TAGLIABUE

Horns, Drums, Banners, Masked Dancers, Very Noisy Musicians, Rattling Clanging Bells in the Vast Allegory

The
flourishes
of adjectives
like the flourishes
of processions announced
the masked rider with his Golden
Noun.

WARD ABBOTT

A NIGHT IN SUMMER

Night springs forth
On summer evening
Of half-light swallowed
By darkness.
And when the night comes,
None is peaceful,
But neon life throbs
In the streets
Below the green star.
The ocean of night-people
Crashes against the shore
Of floundered day.

DANIEL POLSBY

CANTICLE OF SPRING

Today is spring.
soft shrouded warm floods the loving earth.
the hazegreening trees bob lightly in the wind.
dandelions dot the slip soft day.
misty, sighing sweet rain bathes the spring;
the day forgets:
yesterday's ice drips dumbly down a drain.