

1936

Cinquains

Laressa Cox McBurney

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq>

Recommended Citation

Cox McBurney, Laressa. "Cinquains." New Mexico Quarterly 6, 3 (1936). <https://digitalrepository.unm.edu/nmq/vol6/iss3/14>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by the University of New Mexico Press at UNM Digital Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in New Mexico Quarterly by an authorized editor of UNM Digital Repository. For more information, please contact disc@unm.edu.

try, dignity, and a certain stoic mastery over fate. In their ceremonial dances they find a deep mysterious significance, which in its blood-and-soul stirring emotion seems to link man with the underflowing river of life through nature, singing as it flows.

Cinquains

By LARESSA COX MCBURNEY

Beauty

These be
Beauteous things:
A stalwart pine . . . blue spruce
On sunny glade . . . aspen above
A brook.

Desert Sunrise

Daybreak
Long gray shadows,
A tinge rose on cliff,
Glory of gold on far headland,
Sunrise!

Night

Just now,
Out of the depths
Of the darksome forest
A whisper floated mournfully,
Night is born.