Contributors to This Issue

T. M. PEARCE, PH.D., associate professor of English at the University of New Mexico, has studied at the University of Montana and the University of Pittsburgh. Recently he has become interested in research work in New Mexico and Southwestern words, with their origins and historical backgrounds.

DAVID NEUMANN came to New Mexico from Chicago a year ago, and showed such a keen interest in all things New Mexican that he was soon deep in the studies of the people who live here. He is residing in Santa Fe.

VERNON G. SORRELL, PH.D., associate professor of Economics and Business Administration at the University of New Mexico, paused long enough in his work of bringing a new publication into the world, to write on taxation problems, putting down the result of painstaking study of the question. He will be editor of the New Mexico Business Review, to be published by the Department of Economics of the University and the State Bankers' Association.

ANNA E. FALLS, M.A., did her advanced work at the University of New Mexico, and is now a member of the faculty at Menaul School, in Albuquerque. Dr. Lummis, of whom she writes, is a widely known and much loved pioneer of New Mexico archaeology and folk studies.

HARTLEY BURR ALEXANDER, PH.D., is professor of philosophy at Scripps College, Claremont, California. He is a regular member of the University of New Mexico summer field school faculty. Philosophy and anthropology share the leading place in his studious interests. This is the second article he has contributed to THE QUARTERLY.

JOHN E. ENGLEKIRK, M.A., has studied at St. Stephen's College and Northwestern University before coming to the University of New Mexico, where he is assistant professor in Romance Languages. He has to his credit a number of fine translations from Spanish, especially of tales in which the Poe influence can be traced.

F. M. DENTON, F.C.G.I., studied at Hymer's College, Hull, England, and at Imperial College of Science and Technology, London. He is head of the department of electrical engineering at the University of New Mexico, and a member of the editorial board of THE QUARTERLY.

ELIZABETH VAN ARSDALE is a student at Scripps College, Claremont, Calif.
